DOUBLE MURDER IN "THE CRIPPLE"

EXPRESSMEN QUARREL OVER LATE BUSINESS.

TWO ARE SHOT DOWN DEAD

A THIRD IS IN THE CITY JAIL CHARGED WITH MURDER.

ILL FEELING HAS EXISTED

For Years Two of the Men Had Been At Swords Points—Walter Alexander and Bill Bills Victims—Thorpe Insists He Is Innocent.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 28.—As a result of a quarrel among expressmen as to who should handle the business on the arrival of the Midland train from Colorado Springs, late last night, Walter Alexander and Albert Bills are dead, and Nate Thorpe is in the city jail charged with murder.

Bills was shot through the heart, and dropped dead in his tracks. Alexander was shot through the abdomen and died a few minutes afterward. The killing of Bills is believed to have been accidental, as he had taken no part in the controversy and fight which ensued.

Ill Feeling Had Existed.

An ill feeling had existed between Thorpe and Alexander for several years. After all the other passengers had left the platform two strangers approached the expressmen and inquired as to the best place to stop for the night. The two drivers at once began to quarrel about who should handle the business, and within a few minutes three shots rang out in quick succession.

Those about the station rushed toward the men, to find one of the trio, Bills, dead on the platform, a bullet hole through his body, and the other two struggling and swaying about, locked in a tight embrace. The two men finally fell and rolled down the platform steps, a distance of 12 or 15 feet, then continued to roll some distance down the sidewalk, still fighting.

Men Are Separated.

Thomas Cope, a locomotive hostler, and Bert Burrows, an electrician, finally reached the men, pulling them apart. Alexander was seen to have been badly beaten about the head, and a bullet, a 38-caliber from a double-action hammerless, had penetrated his abdomen. He died a few minutes after his antagonist was made to desist in the punishment of his victim.

Alexander, before dying, made the statement to those about him that he had been shot by Thorpe. Thorpe, however, declares that the gun was not his, and that he did no shooting. He lays the firing of the weapon to Alexander.

Drunk A Several Days.

Thorpe had been drunk for several days. Last Tuesday Clydia Colyer, a trained nurse in this city, swore out a complaint against Thorpe, alleging that he had struck her and broken her glasses. Thorpe could not be found for two days, but finally appeared and gave bond for his appearance. He is aged 42 years, is married and has a son 9 years of age.

Alexander was 46 years of age and married. He leaves a wife and a son, aged six years. He was a member of the Elks, Eagles and Red Men, and has been a resident of Cripple Creek for 12 years.

Albert Bills was single and 40 years of age. He had been working during the past summer on a horse ranch on Four Mile, and had gone to work for Alexander only three weeks ago.

Feeling was high tonight against Thorpe, and as a precaution, several officers were stationed about the jail where he is incarcerated.

ROAD OFFICIALS SUMMONED

Harriman Corporations Indicted for Violation of Law.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—Judge Dayton of the United States circuit court issued today an order for the summoning of officials of the Southern Pacific railroad and the Pacific Mail Steamship company, on indictments returned yesterday charging the two Harriman corporations with granting reductions in rates on shipments from Japan without filing the three days' notice required under the old law, to be filed with the interstate commerce commission.

Those upon the summonses were served are: R. P. Schwerin, general manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship company; A. M. Garland, traffic manager; W. J. Hardy, agent; E. E. Calvin, general manager of the Southern Pacific; W. R. Scott, general superintendent; J. J. Wickett, assistant secretary, and George Redington, assistant treasurer.

CONSTANTINE SAFE IN JOLIET

Murderer of Mrs. Louise Gentry to Serve Life Sentence.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—Frank J. Constantine recently sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of Mrs. Louise Gentry, was hurried to the prison at Joliet today under a heavy guard. The authorities had been warned that an attempt would be made to rescue him from the county jail. This morning Constantine was brought before Judge Kavanaugh and although his leading attorney was out of the city the court compelled the attorney who appeared for him to take up the motion for a new trial. The argument was brief, Judge Kavanaugh denied the motion and immediately passed sentence. Constantine was then hurried to Joliet on the first train. Sheriff Strassheim received an anonymous letter from a woman saying that a plan had been formed to free the prisoner and that the escape of two men from the jail within a week was part of the plan to do so. She declared that one of the guards was a party to the plot and said that her husband was also in it. She declared that if the plan to rescue Constantine failed here it would be attempted when he arrived at Joliet.

BIG REAL ESTATE DEAL

JOHN MOSLEY SELLS TERRACE AND BUYS OTHER PROPERTY.

Will Spend $40,000 in West Side Improvements—Trades for Arkansas and San Luis Land.

Following closely the consummation of three real estate deals in this city, involving a total consideration of $69,000, and embracing among other property, purchase and sale of more than a score of houses on the west side, John Mosley, of 1314 Lincoln avenue, will expend $40,000 in improvements on a site on Colorado avenue, in addition to large sums in the cultivation of San Luis and Arkansas valley land. The latter farming land received in part consideration for his Colorado Springs property.

Mr. Mosley sold to C. L. McPherson of Holly, 19 houses and Mosley's hall, all known as Mosley's terrace, in the 1300 block on Lincoln avenue. This terrace was built by Mr. Mosley about a year ago. It is occupied by 19 families, and includes Mr. Mosley's home, valued at $10,000.

Will Raise Sugar Beets.

The property was exchanged for $80,000 worth of land at Holly, in the Arkansas valley. In addition to four dwellings in Holly, the property embraces several hundred acres surrounding the Holly sugar beet factory. Mr. Mosley will leave Wednesday to begin operations on the land. There are 480 acres of the tract now under cultivation, 200 acres of this being in hay, and the remainder in sugar beets. Mr. Mosley has bought 20 work horses for immediate operation in the field and will plow several hundred acres of sod this fall with a view to raising sugar beets on an extensive scale. This deal was closed directly between the two owners, Mr. McPherson will move to this city next Tuesday.

Mr. Mosley has also just purchased from the L. O. Johnson estate, a large building site on the corner of Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue. The consideration was $5,000. He will build a new home for himself and family, in addition to two other residences on the site, at a total cost of $40,000.

Buys San Luis Valley Realty.

A third big realty deal just closed by Mr. Mosley was the exchange of his two double houses on the corner of Thirteenth street and Lincoln avenue for 185 acres of land adjoining the town of Mosco, in the San Luis valley, in addition to a six-room house and 40 lots in the town. About half of the farm is covered with a splendid pea crop, used for fattening hogs. The land, which belonged to W. H. Terry, is valued at $14,000. The deal was negotiated by Daniel Hewitt of this city.

After his return from Denver today or tomorrow, where he went yesterday to close the deal for the Johnson estate property, Mr. Mosley will remain here until Wednesday, when he will go to Holly to superintendent the beginning of plowing and other operations. He has a suite of rooms at the Brayton Inn in West Colorado Springs, where he will live with his family until his new residence is built.

Mr. Mosley came here from England two years ago last March and has invested in Colorado Springs property. The deals which he has just closed are among the largest made here in several years.

CARD SYSTEM NEEDED

STATE LABOR COMMISSIONER SAYS IT'S A GOOD THING.

Declares Trouble and Strife Would Ensue in Cripple Creek District if It Were Abolished.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 28.—Alex. Swanson, state commissioner of labor, prior to his departure for Denver this evening, stated that he had visited a number of mines, talked with the men, and that he had found that the card system in vogue is generally satisfactory; further, that strife and trouble would undoubtedly ensue if the system were abolished.

Mr. Swanson said:

"If the card system should be abolished, some such plan should be invoked to keep out professional agitators. In my opinion the depression in the mining and business circles at present is due to the destruction of the Golden Cycle mill at Colorado City. I found a few of the mines short of men, but this condition exists in every mining district in the state, and throughout the west, which I believe is caused by the unprecedented prosperity now being enjoyed all over the country."

Mr. Swanson will be at the meeting in Colorado Springs, Monday, when the committee of seven will confer with the Mine Owners association with a view to having the card system abolished or modified. Swanson has been in the district for the past several days.

KIDNAP EDITOR; PLANS MISCARRY

OFFICERS CARRY OFF OLDER OF 'FRISCO BULLETIN.

LIBELOUS STORY PROMPTS ACT

RESCUE IS EFFECTED THROUGH HABEAS CORPUS.

PARTY IS TAKEN FROM TRAIN

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., Sept. 28.—Fremont Older, managing editor of the San Francisco Bulletin, who has been active in the prosecution of the bribery graft cases in San Francisco, was taken off a southbound Southern Pacific train at 8:30 o'clock this morning by a force of 20 deputy sheriffs, who served a warrant for his arrest to appear in the superior court before Judge S. E. Crow at 10 o'clock this morning on habeas corpus proceedings instituted to rescue him from the hands of a deputy constable from Los Angeles, who it is alleged virtually kidnaped him in San Francisco.

Word was received here early this morning of the reported kidnaping of Editor Older and of his enforced trip to Los Angeles in the custody of a deputy sheriff. Attorney Cobb, Francis J. Heney's associate, telephoned to Richard and Carrier, local attorneys, and asked them to institute habeas corpus proceedings to take Older from his captors on the train. Judge S. E. Crow of the superior court was roused from bed at 2 a. m., and all necessary papers prepared, empowering the sheriff to capture Older by force if need be.

Party Taken From Train.

All available deputy sheriffs and police were on hand and boarded the train promptly as soon as it came to a standstill. The first search failed to reveal Older or his captors, but on going through the rear Pullman car a second time he was seen and recognized. A copy of the warrant and the habeas corpus proceedings were then served on Older and shown to Deputy Constable Ben. Cohn of Los Angeles, who had him in charge. Older and the Santa Barbara officers left the train without resistance. Attorneys Porter Ashe and Luther Brown were on the train and accompanied the deputies.

Escorted by several deputy sheriffs, Older was conducted to a waiting automobile and rushed to the court house to await a hearing.

The legal ground upon which he was taken by the Los Angeles officers was a warrant for his arrest issued by J. W. Summerfield, of a justice court in Los Angeles, and sworn to by a brother of Attorney Brown. It charges Older and R. H. Corrothers of the San Francisco Bulletin of San Francisco with criminal libel in connection with the alleged kidnaping of ex-Supervisor Lonergan, which was frustrated by Detective Burns.

Libelous Story.

Last Wednesday's issue of the Bulletin contained an account of certain actions of Luther Brown in connection with it, in which it is alleged that he had been in company with a disreputable woman. The warrant was issued in Los Angeles because Attorney Brown's home is there. In telling of his arrest and spirited away, Mr. Older said:

"I was in the office of Francis J. Heney yesterday afternoon about 1 o'clock waiting for Rudolph Spreckels, when a telephone message came for me. I answered it and asked who it was, receiving the reply that it was a Mr. Stapleton and that he was at the Savoy hotel. I asked what he wanted and he replied that he wished to see me on personal business. I hesitated and he repeated that it was very important and personal business which he could not discuss over the telephone. I suspected that it was a trap and told Attorney Cobb so. He said of course it was a trap, but I determined, however, to see just what it was and told them to leave word for Rudolph Spreckels when he came in, that if I was not back soon they would know what was doing. After leaving Heney's office I saw that two automobiles were following me on Van Ness avenue. They dashed to the curb and four men jumped out of one of them. A warrant was thrust into my face and I was told that it was from Los Angeles.

"I protested that I wanted to see my attorney about it, but they would not let me. The four men had surrounded me and hustled me into the automobile. In it were two deputy sheriffs and two others, one of whom I think was a Calhoun detective. In the other car were Attorneys Ash and Brown."

Mr. Older said that the men promised to take him before Judge Carroll Cook, who had countersigned the warrant, but instead of doing so rushed him at the rate of 30 miles an hour to Redwood City, where they got on a train with him.

Threatened With Revolver.

"When they seized me on the sidewalk," said Mr. Older, "they searched me to make sure that I had no weapons. In the automobile the man next to me thrust something which I supposed to be a revolver, against my side and told me he would shoot if I made any disturbance."

Finally the captive was permitted to dictate a message to Rudolph Spreckels. He was unaware of the habeas corpus proceedings until Santa Barbara was reached. In concluding a statement Mr. Older said:

"This whole thing is a conspiracy, scheme of Patrick Calhoun. They are a desperate band and will stop at nothing."

The proceedings before superior judge S. E. Crow lasted an hour and a half, in which time the whole story of the kidnaping came out. Bonded by Older, being allowed out on the sum of $2,000 named in the warrant to guarantee his appearance in the justice court in Los Angeles at such time as the court there should demand. The bail bond was signed by H. P. Lincoln, cashier of the First National bank, and Paul Fox, a local capitalist.

Luther Brown, who swore to the complaint of criminal libel against Older, told his story of the circumstances. "Say for me," he said, "that this is entirely a personal matter. Neither although nor any other man has instigated me to undertake these proceedings."

He denied the reports that had been published about him. Attorney Porter Ash, who testified during the proceedings practically admitted the kidnaping of Older.

Mr. Older will return to San Fran-

PUREST WATER IN U. S.

Absolutely Free From Typhoid and Coli Growth.—Hanford Talks of Conditions.

Colorado Springs has the purest water in the United States. This is proven by an exhaustive test by the health department last Wednesday, covering every creek, reservoir, inlet, outlet and intake in the city water system. The investigation, which is the most complete ever made of the system, shows that the unusually healthful water of this city is not only absolutely free from typhoid and coli growth, but that the number of bacteria per cubic centimeter is less by far than that in any other water system in the country. The number of bacteria per cubic centimeter ranges from 50 to 165, as compared to from 500 to 1,200 per cubic centimeter in the various reports submitted from other cities. In many towns the number of bacteria runs to an astonishingly large figure, reaching several thousand per cubic centimeter, but these reports are seldom made public.

The tests were made by Health Commissioner P. O. Hanford, Health Inspector J. R. Coffman and City Chemist Lester S. Bale.

Dr. Hanford Talks.

Dr. Hanford has the following to say of the Colorado Springs water system:

"It is the best in the country. As a result of the most exhaustive test possible, embracing every portion of the system, it is proven beyond the slightest doubt that typhoid fever can not be contracted by drinking the water of our city. Previous tests, less comprehensive than the present one, have shown the system to be remarkably free from typhoid germs, but the examination of last Wednesday, checked carefully to preclude all error, shows the water to be in the best condition in its history.

Chemist Bale also was enthusiastic regarding the result of the test. He pointed out that in only two out of the 23 tests was any gas production discovered. At reservoir No. 3 the percentage of gas production was 2, and in Bear creek the percentage was 5. This gas was produced by other causes than by typhoid growth, since these growths would result in a gas production of at least 25 per cent.

The remarkable purity of the water

ELIHU ROOT IN SAN ANTONIO

Secretary Meets Mexican Welcoming Committee.—Continues Journey to Mexico City.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Sept. 28.—Elihu Root, secretary of state, was today the guest of San Antonio. He was entertained lavishly and after 15 strenuous hours left the city at 11 o'clock tonight for Mexico City.

The secretary was met here by the Mexican welcoming committee, which consisted of Gen. Pedro Gallardo, chairman; Major Porfirio Diaz, Jr., son of the president; Julio Limantour, brother of the secretary of finance, and Lieut.-Col. Samuel Garcia Cuellar of the president's staff. Ambassador and Mrs. Thompson accompanied them. The formal meetings of the representatives of the two republics took place at 11 o'clock in the parlors of the International club.

From that time on Secretary Root and the representatives of Mexico participated jointly in the luncheons, receptions and automobile rides through the city, ending with a banquet this evening on the roof of the International club.

WANT PRESIDENT TO SPEAK

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—Governors, United States senators and representatives in congress of all states west of the Mississippi have joined in a formal invitation to President Roosevelt to address the Transmississippi congress at Muskogee, November 18-22. The invitation was presented today by Senator Curtis of Kansas. The president indicated that because of the meeting of congress in December he will be unable to attend.

STEUNENBERG'S PART IN FRAUD

WEYERHAUSERS MENTIONED

SEVERAL WITNESSES TESTIFY

Many Letters Are Introduced as Evidence—Former Senator Foster of Tacoma, Wash., on Stand for Few Minutes—Little Progress Is Made.

BOISE, Ida., Sept. 28.—Mention of the Weyerhausers, the owners of vast timber land tracts in the northwest, was made in the trial of Senator Borah today for the first time. This was when George S. Long of Tacoma, Wash., took the stand and stated that in response to a request from James T. Barber, of Eau Claire, Wis., he had allowed his name to be used as a "dummy" trustee in the acquisition of Idaho timber lands. He produced a letter from Mr. Baker making the proposition as follows:

"Exigencies have arisen which make it desirable to pass title to certain lands in Idaho through some party entirely removed from association with the Barber Lumber company. The circumstances being similar to those which made it desirable to use my name in connection with some of the Weyerhauser Timber company's property, I have therefore taken the responsibility of directing the placing of title to certain lands in you."

Had Not Employed Borah.

Lond said he had been a personal friend of Barber for 17 years. He received no compensation for his services as trustee, never saw any of the deeds, did not employ Borah as counsel and in fact never met the senator until this year. The attorneys for the defense asked Long what the "exigencies" referred to by Barber meant.

"I suppose," replied the witness, "they were the same as arose in Washington when I was purchasing property for the Weyerhausers and when I used Mr. Barber's name. If we used the Weyerhauser's name in any locality it always sent the prices up and brought competition."

More letters tending to show Governor Steunenberg was interested in timber land speculation were introduced and read to the jury.

Show Steunenberg's Connection.

BOISE, Idaho, Sept. 28.—When the trial of United States Senator Borah was resumed today, the attorneys for the government continued their efforts to establish the connection of former Governor Frank Steunenberg with the timber land conspiracy, which it is said existed in this state from 1901 to 1904. A. B. Campbell, of Spokane, a wealthy mine owner who formerly resided in the Coeur d'Alene district of Idaho, was recalled to the stand to tell further of conversations he had with Albert E. Palmer, one of the alleged "dummy" trustees in the handling of timber land claims.

Mr. Campbell, when approached by former Governor Steunenberg with a proposition to go into the timber land business, turned the matter over to Palmer who said he had wealthy friends in Wisconsin already interested in the lumber trade. These men were James T. Barber and Sumner G. Moon, of Eau Claire, Wis., officers of the Barber Lumber company, which operates here and jointly indicted with Senator Borah, Steunenberg and the others.

Letters Introduced.

Letters which Campbell received from Steunenberg, bringing former United States Senator Foster of Washington into the situation, were identified by the witness and put in evidence. One of these read:

"Senator Foster's letter has been forwarded to my eastern associates. The tieup of 12 of the claims continues, but I have faith that through the work of yourself and friends we can soon find a solution now that we have a pointer on the inspector and those that are responsible for his appointment."

A second letter contains the following:

"Any time you can make an appointment with Senator Foster, I can come. This feature of the timber deal is getting into bad shape. Sharp, the inspector, and the land office people have worked so secretly and used so much deception even with their friends, that I have not been able to learn the true situation, much less do any work. I think you had better ask Senator Foster to hold Sharp off until I can see the senator."

Campbell Met Borah.

Campbell said he visited Boise soon after this and during his stay saw Senator Borah two or three times. He thought the conversation had to do with the timber matter, but would not recall what it was.

Campbell told of meeting Steunenberg in Washington, D. C., late in 1902. Steunenberg told Campbell that many of his timber claims were being held up and wanted Campbell to see Senator Spooner of Wisconsin and Mark Hanna. The witness did not see either.

E. N. Seale, an officer of the Exchange National bank of Spokane, identified deposit slips for drafts for $45,000 drawn by A. E. Palmer on James E. Barber and Sumner G. Moon. The prosecution says it will show that money was transferred to Steunenberg and given by him to Wells and Kincaid, two members of the alleged conspiracy.

Seale identified a number of bank books in which the Palmer account was kept. He said that very soon after each of the drafts on Barber and Moon were deposited, the money was checked out by Palmer in amounts from $500 to $1,000. Former Senator A. H. Foster of Tacoma, was on the stand for a few minutes. He said Steunenberg called at his office and asked him to see Sharp, the special inspector, about certain claims that were held up. Foster said he saw Sharp to see Campbell and that was the last he saw or heard of Steunenberg.

EIGHT DEAD IN WRECK

PASSENGER TRAIN CRASHES INTO REAR OF FREIGHT.

Open Switch Cause of Fatal Accident on Baltimore & Ohio Road. Many Injured.

WHEELING, W. Va., Sept. 28.—Eight men were killed and a score injured, several fatally, at Bellaire, O., this afternoon, when the Chicago and Wheeling express on the Baltimore and Ohio railway crashed into a freight, which was moving slowly on a siding. The dead:

MICHAEL HEINZE, Wheeling.
WILLIAM SHAW, Wheeling.
CARL BERAN, Milwaukee, Wis.
T. N. GALBRAITH, freight engineer, Newark, O.
F. E. MOTZ, freight conductor, Newark.
HARRY SEITZ, Massillon, Ohio.
H. A. LIPSCOMB, passenger engineer, Newark.
E. L. ROSS, Cleveland.

Failed to Throw Switch.

The wreck was due, it is said, to the failure of an operator to throw a switch. The westbound freight had received orders to meet the passenger at the western limits of the Bellaire yard and was moving slowly along the siding. Where the wreck occurred there is a sharp curve which prevents the engineers of eastbound trains from seeing more than a few feet ahead. The passenger train swung around the curve rapidly, being three hours late, and should have gone on in safety on the main line. The switch to the siding had not been turned and the train shot into the freight.

The worst damage was done to the smoker which was telescoped by the baggage car. Every occupant of the smoker was injured or killed. The passengers in the day coach and the two Pullmans were tumbled from their seats but not seriously hurt.

General Manager Fitzgerald, who was in the neighborhood on an inspection and General Superintendent W. C. Loree of Wheeling, superintended the rescue work.

Theatrical Troupe in Wreck.

Among the passengers were the members of Richard Carle's "Spring Chicken" comic opera company, which was to have played at Wheeling this evening. All the members of the company escaped serious injuries except Alfred Dalby, the musical director. It was found necessary to amputate his right arm.

At the office of Superintendent Loree tonight it was said that they were not yet certain who was to blame for the accident, but a thorough investigation is under way.

Engineer H. A. Lipscomb on the passenger train underwent probably the most heroic surgical operation in modern times. Caught beneath his engine, it was found impossible to remove the broken iron from his body, on account of the way in which one of his legs was entangled. Escaping steam across his face made it impossible to administer anaesthetics and physicians amputated the leg as he lay there conscious. He bore the ordeal bravely, but it is feared that he will die.

Thank services were held tonight by every member of the "Spring Chicken" company from Richard Carle himself down to the humblest chorus man. The company of 15 escaped with but one musical director.

FEDERAL SUPERVISION

CATTLE AND SHEEP MOVEMENT TO BE INSPECTED.

National Bureau of Animal Industry to Co-operate With State Board of Stock Inspection.

DENVER, Sept. 28.—Movement of cattle and sheep within Colorado, as well as to other states, will now be supervised and rigidly inspected by federal government agents. This agreement, which takes effect immediately, was reached yesterday afternoon by the state board of stock inspection, in conference with Dr. Lowell Clark, chief government inspector in Colorado; Dr. Herman Busman, government inspector at the Denver Union stock yards; Colonel William A. Skinner, president of the Denver stock yards, and W. A. Johnson, representing the commission men.

The national bureau of animal industry will now co-operate with the state board of stock inspection in Colorado to stamp out diseased live stock. The government already has supervision of all public stock yards in the country to the end that only clean and uninfected live stock may find its way to the markets of the United States.

From now on stock moved from infected areas in the state will be inspected by government inspectors and placed in quarantine. Heretofore this character of stock moved from one point to another in Colorado was sub-

SECRETARY TAFT REACHES JAPAN

HOPES TO CREATE BETTER FEELING.

HIS GREETING MOST CORDIAL

MUCH IS PLANNED IN HONOR OF AMERICAN.

WAS AN UNEVENTFUL VOYAGE

Trip Across Pacific Has Been Fraught With no Mishap—Stops on Peace Mission En Route to the Philippines and Tour of the World.

TOKIO, Sept. 28.—Secretary Taft arrived at Yokohama early this morning and his first day in Japan has contributed much toward reassuring the Japanese about the feeling toward them in America. Thomas J. O'Brien, the new American ambassador, who arrived with Mr. Taft, did not fail in doing his part in the creation of a better feeling between the two countries.

The Hochi Shimbun publishes this evening a half-tone picture of the secretary landing at Yokohama and an interview in which Mr. Taft is quoted as saying:

"America and Japan always will be friends. The necessity for arms in trade is something we do not recognize. I speak as secretary of war of America and also as the secretary of peace."

Taft Friend of Japan.

The newspapers tomorrow will publish similar interviews as well as lengthy editorials welcoming Taft as the representative of "America, the friend of Japan."

After an uneventful voyage across the Pacific from Seattle, which port he left September 13, the Minnesota stole up the Tokio bay just as dawn was breaking this morning and anchored at the Yokohama quarantine station.

The program for the entertainment of the secretary was changed at a late hour today and all of the arrangements made by the navy department and the committee of the imperial household will be subjected to this new plan. According to the expressed desire of the emperor, Secretary Taft will be received in audience and entertained at luncheon Wednesday. There will be no functions Sunday. Monday, Count Hayashi, the foreign minister, will give a luncheon and Monday night the municipality of Tokio will give a dinner in Secretary Taft's honor. Two hundred invitations have been sent out for this latter function.

Tuesday the secretary will lunch with H. Percival Dodge, American charge d'affaires, after which he will be given a reception by the American residents of Yokohama. That evening he will be entertained at dinner by the minister of war, Lieut.-Gen. Terouchi Masaki.

Refers Japs to Roosevelt.

Among those who were received by Secretary Taft on the Minnesota this morning were several leading journalists of Japan. Replying to a felicitous speech of welcome, Secretary Taft said that it was only necessary to refer his questioners to the message of President Roosevelt for his views on racial prejudice.

The secretary was asked if the United States intends to sell the Philippine islands. To this Mr. Taft replied that America had no intention of selling, adding that he had no mission in Japan except to bring friendly greetings and visit old friends on his way to Manila.

The secretary outlined his proposed trip around the world and spoke of plans for the future government of the Philippines. Concluding, "the future here lies in Mr. O'Brien's hands."

Mr. O'Brien then made a brief address in which he said his mission was one of peace and that he was extremely gratified at his reception.

The various reception committees, the members of the American embassy and others who had gone to Yokohama to welcome Mr. Taft were awakened by runners at an early hour and by 7:30 boarded the Minnesota amid the firing of salutes from the ships and the booming of 17 guns from the American cruiser Chattanooga anchored in the bay. After the reception in the Minnesota, Mr. and Mrs. Taft and Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien had breakfast. Then Mr. and Mrs. Taft came ashore and were driven to the Grand hotel preceded by a squadron of cavalry.

Mr. Taft rested for a few hours after which he was entertained at luncheon by Count Terashima. The Japanese committee of welcome and the prominent members of Mr. Taft's party also were present. Mr. O'Brien accompanied by Mr. Dodge, Peter Augustus Jay, first secretary of the American embassy and other members of the embassy staff came to Tokio at 11 o'clock and are temporarily quartered at the Imperial hotel. Mr. and Mrs. Taft left Yokohama at 4 o'clock; they were cheered at the railway station by high government officials and representatives of the American embassy. The station was gaily decorated in honor of the visitors. Owing to the fact that the hour of their arrival had not been announced, only a small crowd had gathered.

At the railroad station, Mr. and Mrs. Taft entered one of the imperial carriages and were at once driven to the detached palace of Gyoen, one of the picturesque resident residences of the imperial family.

Smart Tailored Suits

DRESS has seemingly scored its greatest triumph this season. Fashion's demand for extreme ideas and more original effects has been an incentive to designers to attempt the almost impossible in the production of stunning apparel. To say that their efforts have met with pronounced success is but stating it modestly, as the styles have struck a most responsive chord among fashionable dressers who are eager to accept the extreme things. These are to be had here in a great variety.

The materials are plain and fancy broadcloths, serges, novelty stripes and mixtures, velvet and chiffon velvet. The colorings are all so different and alluring allowing everyone's tastes to be satisfied, and in selecting this vast stock we have considered the wants of the conservative as well as the extreme dressers. We will be glad to have you look through our suit section.

Redfern and Warner's Corsets

We have every model in these reliable corsets that will fit any form the qualities are the most satisfactory wearing materials—the boning is absolutely Rust-Proof. These are the only corsets with the hose supporters scientifically attached. They are considered for each model in the designing of that model. "SECURITY" Rubber Button Hose Supporters are the best.

Miss Gertrude May White, expert corsetiere of New York, but recently with the Daniels-Fisher store, Denver, is with us permanently, and will take great pleasure in fitting you, and will give you the benefit of her vast experience. There is no charge for fitting, and those who have heretofore been uncomfortably corseted will find a visit with her time well spent.

WARNER'S STYLE 121—Made for a medium, stout, short-waisted figure. It is low bust and very long hip, but short back. Made in coutille and in satine. Can only be appreciated when once worn 1.50

WARNER'S STYLE 175—Here is a little corset for little figures, made of dotted mercerized batiste. The girdle top permits plenty of freedom in breathing, etc., and has the dip hip, not the abrupt hip, as you had a year ago 1.50

WARNER'S STYLE 291—A new medium high bust model, made of excellent quality batiste, long over hip and abdomen. The smart waist line and trim form are the splendid results from wearing this model 2.25

WARNER'S STYLE 115 One of Warner's latest designs which we are featuring at 1.00, made of coutille, high bust and just right in every way to meet the requirements of the average figure 1.00

REDFERN STYLE 2—A well-made, coutille trimmed with good embroidery, with a medium high bust, long hips, giving a tapering waist. It is especially adapted for a medium height person with full bust 4.00

REDFERN STYLE 28—A low bust coutille corset for the stout figure, long enough over abdomen and back to contain all the surplus flesh of which all large women wish to dispose 4.00

REDFERN STYLE X—A medium high bust corset of German coutille, for a medium figure. Gives a very graceful form, emphasizing the beauty curves of the figure and correcting any defect of same 3.00

REDFERN STYLE C For a rather stout figure, it is medium bust, both in height and fullness and hips both in height and fullness. It is the modiste's delight to fit over this corset 4.00

The Springs Store

Sunday Page

This is our publicity space, it's our REGULAR WEEKLY. We use it for the purpose of telling you what we know about ourselves, our store and our merchandise. We try and do it honestly with no effort whatever of attracting your attention by OFFERINGS that are not bona fide and substantially as stated. It's your explicit confidence we want; we do not care for your one conventional call. We want you to come once and keep coming. We can't expect you nor anyone else to keep coming unless we have something you should wish to come for. That something we have and we know it. More and more of you are finding it out all the time and yet we are looking for other converts. It's human nature. The more we have the more we want.

Suit Department

Suit Section

At the near completion of the arrivals here it would seem that DRESS had scored its greatest triumph this season. Fashion's demand for extreme ideas and more original effects have been an incentive to designers to attempt the productions that are now meeting with so much favor. They seem to have struck the most responsive chord among fashionable dressers who eagerly accept their efforts. Our selection must surely be among the very best and we would be sorry indeed should you go wrong for the failure of seeing our garments. OUR ADVICE IS, SEE OURS FIRST BEFORE YOU DECIDE. NO HORSE FOR HIM.

From Harper's Magazine.

Once upon a time there was a young married man who had some slight bickerings with the woman of his choice. These having occurred with great frequency he went to his father, who was older and much more married.

"Father," he said, "is it not meet that I should be the ringmaster in my own wickup. Or must I kowtow to the old lady?"

Whereat the old man smiled wisely and said:

"My son, yonder are a hundred chickens and here a fine team of horses. Do you place the feathered tribe on this wagon, hitch up the team, and start out. Wherever you find a man and his wife living together, make diligent investigation to find out who the commanding officer is, and where it is the woman give her a chicken. If you find a man running a house give him one of the horses."

So the young man loaded up the fowls and started out upon his pilgrimage of self education. And when he had but seven chickens left, he approached a habitation with his forlorn inquiry, to which the man replied:

"I'm the ace-high cockalorum of this outfit."

And the wife, without fear or favor corroborated the statement. Then the young man said:

"Take your choice of the horses. Either one you fancy is yours." And after the man had walked around the team several times and looked in their mouths, he said, "Well, I'll take the bay."

Now, the wife didn't like bay horses, and she called John aside, and after whispering in his ear she allowed him to return.

"I guess I'll take the black horse," he said.

FLOATS FOR CONEY ISLAND MARDI GRAS

From the New York Sun.

Down in the old Sea Beach palace, in Coney Island, they are busy making the floats for the Mardi Gras carnival, which will wind up the season in the week of September 16. The parade this year is going to have a patriotic twist. The 13 floats are each to represent one of the original states of the Union, and each will carry a number of girls in appropriate costumes. There are to be a thousand young women in the parade, the managers say, and they are all to be good lookers, if so many can be found. Several bands will help make racket and a second section of the parade will be made up of industrial floats, some of which will be amusing.

An idea of the magnitude of the construction work on the floats may be had from these facts. Twelve thousand feet of lumber are used; 40 bundles of meshed wire, each bundle 50 feet long and eight feet wide; half a ton of paper is required for the modeling; 1,500 pounds of different kinds of paint will decorate the floats; 30 bolts of muslin and cheesecloth will cover the framework, and seven kegs of nails are used, besides quantities of hinges, screws, bolts, link wire and cable.

Most of the floats in the fleet are being made at the Sea Beach palace. They are of wire, paper and cloth and some are of velvet. The smaller flowers are bought from the manufacturers. Most of the banners and streamers are made in the workrooms.

The Coney Island Mardi Gras is a big undertaking and its cost is not less than $50,000. All of the expenses are contributed to by business men of Coney Island.

OLD COLOR PRINTS IN DEMAND

From the London Daily Mail.

During the past season some of these prints have produced nearly $25,000, and for one print alone no less than $2,645 was given. For many years these prints, most of which were published at $5, were quite neglected by collectors, but it became the fashion to collect them and now a fine color print is worth as much as a small suburban villa. Every season the cry is raised that the limit has been reached, and every season prices steadily increase.

In collecting, fashion is everything. Collectors as a body are like a flock of sheep. Let one of their number give a fancy price for a hitherto neglected class of art object and they all rush to do likewise. Dealers foster the craze, and prices reach enormous heights. Only too often the craze declines, prices drop and those who have filled their cabinets with the once popular class of objects find that that which has cost them pounds now only realizes shillings.

Many a dealer in London and the provinces has his cellar full to overflowing with objects for which there is now no demand and for which he would be willing to take almost any price.

Pictures painted by many of the men of the mid-Victorian school are an instance. At one time canvases by men such as Goodall and Long realized thousands. Now every week in the season one may see these same works sold at Christie's and elsewhere for a tenth what they at one time realized. The demand for such works has gone, and it will never return is highly improbable.

In the book world the books published by the famous Aldine and Etching societies form another instance of decline in fashion, while the publications of the Kelmscott press can also be mentioned.

A RECIPE FOR A GOOD ROAD.

Simple and Inexpensive, and From an Authority Who Has Tested It.

Claudius Appius had his vision of a road that would perpetuate his name, and his dream has been realized; but beyond that he gave what?—the monument of a tyrant who compelled thousands to work for naught, and a lasting example of how not to build a road. The Appian Way, famous in picture and story, is avoided over a greater portion of its length by every traveler who is in a hurry to reach his journey's end.

This old Roman idea of a deep foundation has lived after him, but no experienced road builder adopts it. It has gone the way of the Roman aqueduct, and, like it, has become a monument of unnecessary work. The old Roman's fancy that it is necessary to build a deep foundation for a road crops out here and there, even at the present time, and is exploited as the best, and, in fact, the only true way to build a road. It was not until road builders learned that thoroughly drained earth was the only sure foundation road improvement has added tens and great advance was made in road construction.

That road improvement is an expensive luxury, something nice to have but too costly for those who have to work for a living, is the fancy of some, but it is not borne out by experience. In New Jersey every dollar expended for road improvement had added tens of hundreds of dollars to our state's wealth.

The first roads I built were sixteen inches deep, composed of ten inches of telford bottom and six inches of compacted two and one-half inch and one and one-half inch crushed stone, and finished with coarse stone screenings. That the foundation of this kind of road lasts is true, but the top wears off much more quickly, and when that is gone every driver avoids the telford road in good weather.

To build a good stone road, first grade your hill down to 5 per cent, or less if possible; fill up your flats so that you have a minimum grade of at least one-half per cent; second, by underdrains cut off all water that may threaten the road; third, give your road a crown of three-quarters inch per foot; fourth, cut out your sub-grade, being careful to give it the same curvature as the finished road; fifth, roll the sub-grade until it is hard and smooth, carefully removing any spongy or vegetable earth that the rolling may disclose; sixth, spread your bottom course evenly, then roll and add a little binder and continue the rolling until the stones cease to sink or creep in front of the roller; seventh, spread your second course and roll it, with the addition of binder and water, until the whole surface is hard and smooth, carefully filling with stone any depressions that may appear, then finish the whole with a compacted three-quarter inch stone screenings. This must be soaked with water and rolled until a wave of mud is formed in front of the roller, being particularly careful to commence the rolling at the sides and gradually work toward the center; by so doing you will preserve the crown of your road.

If this work is well and thoroughly done, you will have a road that is smooth, hard and convenient for travel at all seasons of the year.

A spider will live a year without food.

According to the Poet, "John's Power Is in His Simplicity."

From Horace Traubel's Record of Conversations with Walt Whitman in the Century.

Giving me an old Burroughs letter, Whitman said: "That is like a visit to John; it is just as if I took a trip with him into the woods. I can taste his fruit—I can hear the birds sing. It is an old letter—it has been about this room now many years. John was fresh as Esopus then; he had a russle there at first—but he has won out: he is a master vine dresser these days, and all the time his grip on himself has grown firmer—his intuitions have grown outer. John is a good wizard; things come out of their holes—present themselves—ask for orders—when John goes into the woods." W. said further about J. B.: "Did you stop to take a second look at that line in the letter, 'a stream of golden thighs pouring into the hive?' John's power is in his simplicity. He writes well because he does not try to write." "Do you mean that a man should not be deliberate? Your writing is deliberate enough." He replied: "I may say it this way—that we should try to secure expression but that we should not try to make an impression." "But don't expression make an impression?" "I see I have not said the thing very well myself. Let me say it another way. We make one sort of impression by sincerity and another sort of impression by trickery. I mean that we should not try to make an impression by trickery." Seeing I was satisfied he went on about Burroughs: "John never bowls you over with any vivid passion of speech—it is not in him to do it—but he calms and soothes you—takes you out in the open where things are in an amiable mood. John might get real mad—his kettle boil over—but his language would remain conciliatory. William O'Connor, under the same excitation, would blow fiercely and leave his mark on the landscape."

ONCE A BOY HIMSELF

From September Harper's.

"That man remembers that he was once a boy himself," a Broadway jeweler remarked, as a customer left the store. "He came in just now and said he wanted a watch for his boy for a birthday present, and that he wanted the cheapest I had."

"The old skinflint! And I know he is well fixed, too," the jeweler's friend commented.

"The other smiled. "I told him that those very cheap ones wouldn't keep good time," the other continued. "But he said: 'Oh, that's all right. Just give me one that has the back fixed on so that he can get it off—he will be satisfied.'"

BEER TO KILL ABSINTHE.

Who would believe it? France this year holds the record for the consumption of beer. It is estimated that by the end of the year four milliards of bocks will have been drunk. The consumption of beer has increased more than 40 per cent in five years. The consumption of absinthe, however, shows a decline. A blessing on beer if in the long run it triumphs over murderous absinthe!—Le Matin.

BRIEF BITS OF NEWS

SAN JUAN, Sept. 28.—The insular forest reservations have been invaded by thieves, and lumber to the value of $100,000 has been cut. Several arrests have been made and there is reason to believe that many other persons are involved in the frauds.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Premier Clemenceau is in receipt of a telegram from the governor of Algeria saying that the existence of the plague at Oran has been officially established. Two deaths have occurred and 11 cases are under treatment.

NIAGARA FALLS, Sept. 28.—The spot where Captain Abraham F. Hull and nine men on the Ninth regiment United States infantry fell in the battle of Lundy's Lane, July 25, 1814, was marked this afternoon when a huge block of granite was unveiled. Six years ago skeletons were found and identified by scraps of uniforms and buttons.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 28.—Criminal proceedings have been instituted here against Maxim Gorky on account of his novel "Mother," which has been confiscated.

HAVANA, Sept. 28.—The railroad trainmen's strike, which was inaugurated September 26, is spreading. Neither the United nor Western railroad was able to operate trains today.

Four men were fatally injured, as follows:

W. H. Dean, D. B. Kneer, E. J. Blumbaugh, mail clerks, Newark; Benny Daley, Pittsburg. Sixteen others were hurt, mostly residents of this vicinity.

TOPEKA, Kan., Sept. 28.—The Eighteenth United States infantry will start from Fort Leavenworth tomorrow for the Philippines. This is the third trip across the Pacific for this regiment in nine years.

MACHINISTS RETURN TO WORK

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 28.—The committee acting for the five railroads involved in the boilermakers' strike, issued a statement tonight that a carload of boilermakers arrived at Missoula, Mont., today to reopen the Northern Pacific shops there and that 75 men arrived at Oelwein, Ia., to work in the Great Western shops. The machinists in the Northern Pacific shops at Livingston, Mont., who went out, it is said, returned to work today.

Bad Symptoms.

The woman who has periodical headaches, backache, sees imaginary dark spots or specks floating or dancing before her eyes, has gnawing distress or heavy full feeling in stomach, faint spells, dragging-down feeling in lower abdominal or pelvic region, easily startled or excited, irregular or painful periods, with or without pelvic catarrh, is suffering from weaknesses and derangements that should have early attention. Not all of above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time.

Neglected or badly treated and such cases often run into maladies which demand the surgeon's knife if they do not result fatally.

No medicine extant has such a long and numerous record of cures in such cases as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. No medicine has such a strong professional endorsement, or each of its several ingredients—worth more than any number of ordinary non-professional testimonials. The very best ingredients known to medical science for the cure of women's peculiar ailments enter into its composition. No alcohol, harmful, or habit-forming drug is to be found in the list of its ingredients printed on each bottle-wrapper and attested under oath.

In any condition of the female system, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can do only good—never harm. Its whole effect is to strengthen, invigorate and regulate the whole female system and especially the pelvic organs. When these are deranged in function or affected by disease, the stomach and other organs of digestion become sympathetically deranged, the nerves are weakened, and a long list of bad, unpleasant symptoms follow. Too much must not be expected of this Favorite Prescription. It will not perform miracles; will not cure tumors—no medicine will. It will often prevent them, if taken in time, and thus the operating table and the surgeon's knife may be avoided.

Women suffering from diseases of long standing, are invited to consult Doctor Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence is held as strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

ject to state inspection only, and the restrictions were not rigid. In fact, disease was allowed to spread in many cases to uninfected areas.

The state board of stock inspection, after discussion of the proposition to co-operate with the government in the matter of inspection and without relinquishing its rights of state control, adopted the appended resolution. The same action has been taken by Kansas and other stock-raising states in the west:

"Whereas, Upon request of the Colorado state veterinarian, the secretary of agriculture at Washington has consented to co-operate with the Colorado state board of stock inspection in control of scabies of cattle within the state.

"It is hereby ordered that the regulations of the secretary of agriculture in the interstate movement of cattle be, and the same are hereby extended so as to control the interstate movement of cattle within the state, in the same manner as interstate movements are now controlled, viz., by inspection and certification by inspectors of the bureau of animal industry, or by permits, according to the regulations of the bureau governing the interstate movement of cattle."

Calhoun Talks.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—Patrick Calhoun of the United Railroads said tonight that the alleged attempt to kidnap Fremont Older could not truthfully be made to appear to have been undertaken by those defending themselves from charges of bribery.

"The facts are," said Mr. Calhoun, "that Mr. Luther Brown, who is a lawyer of Los Angeles and one of the associate counsel of my defense, was attacked a few evenings ago by the Bulletin, which printed an infamous story concerning him in connection with an alleged attempt to kidnap former supervisor Lonergan.

"Under the state constitution there are but two places that a man accused of criminal libel can be arraigned, one is in the county of the person libeled, the other is in the county where the libel is published.

"Mr. Brown swore out a warrant in Los Angeles county and had the warrant approved in this county by Judge Cook. Older was then arrested and an attempt was made to take him to Los Angeles. It was but an ordinary arrest."

It is further pointed out by Brown's friends that it is perfectly obvious that it would have been futile to have attempted the arraignment of Older in San Francisco county, owing to the relations existing between Older and the prosecuting officials of San Francisco.

CARS SPEED IN SEA OF MUD

Slow Time Is Made at Morris Park Because of Rain—Fiat Car Finishes First.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Speeding through a sea of mud and a downpour of rain, the 35-horsepower Fiat car, driven by Cedrino and Burke, finished first at Morris park tonight at 7:21 p. m., having covered 984 miles; the Studebaker car, driven by Boine and Delmar was second with 878 miles and the Italia car was third with 873 miles.

The heavy rain, which began at 4:30 o'clock, just as the machines were going back on the track after a two hours' recess, compelled all of the drivers to slow down and the record made at the same track three weeks ago by a Renault car, 1079, was not equaled.

Late in the afternoon a 30-horsepower Packard crashed through the infield fence. The machine turned over, pinning C. C. Embleton its driver underneath it. Embleton suffering from a sprained back was removed to his home.

4,000 MILES BY WIRELESS

New Record of Long Distance Transmission Is Established.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—That a new record for long distance transmission by wireless telegraph was established by the armored cruiser Pennsylvania is the belief of Captain Aaron Ward and the officers of the cruisers now in this port. When the warship was 1,000 miles off the coast, a message was caught which was identified as being sent from the naval station at Savannah, Ga., to some ship in the Atlantic. The message could not be read, but the sender was identified and complete confirmation of the remarkable event is now being sought. It is estimated that the distance between Savannah and the Pennsylvania at the time was 4,000 miles.

POLITICS IN NORTHWEST.

Judging by the comments of the larger newspapers of the northwestern coast states, no "reactionary" candidate for the Republican presidential nomination need look for assistance from that quarter. Especially does this statement apply to Oregon. Senator Bourne's friendship with the president is well known in that state, and appears to be appreciated at its true value. While Vice President Fairbanks was in the northwest the newspaper which, through both its editorial columns and its special Washington correspondence, has been particularly friendly to Mr. Bourne, said that Senator Knox could not possibly be nominated, and that his affiliations were such as to make it impossible for the president to expect from the Pennsylvanian, "any more than from Mr. Fairbanks, a sincere and hearty support of the legislation which he advocates."

The same paper had a few things to say about Senator Crane, of Massachusetts, when the recent story about the clash between that statesman and his colleague, Senator Lodge, was sent all over the country. Senator Crane was referred to as a "pussy-footed politician," and it was predicted that opposition from him to any one of the administration policies or political plans would only strengthen the president. It has been frequently said that Mr. Roosevelt was more popular on the Pacific coast, outside of California, than in any other section of the Union, and the facts related here would seem to prove that this is the case.

AN UNWELCOME NITE

From the London Tribune.

Farthings, it is well known, will occasionally figure in church offertories, but the donors seldom meet with such reproof as is meted out in the parish magazine of St. Andrew's, Hertford. The editor of the magazine says:

"A farthing was placed in the offertory at the 7:30 a. m. celebration on St. James' day. We are charitable enough to think that the coin was put in the bag by mistake for half a sovereign. If we are wrong in that surmise, and if the farthing was offered with the full knowledge that it was a farthing, then we can only characterize this incident as the most disgraceful that has come under our notice during our ministerial career, and we can only express the fervent hope that, for her own sake, the lady will forthwith make amends for that flagrant insult to the solmen service of the altar. To avoid a repetition of that occurrence a plate will in future be used on week days instead of a bag."

PIONEER SKYSCRAPER BUILDER

William Hamilton Russell, the New York architect who died while traveling in Europe, was one of the earliest to turn attention to the skyscraper idea for large office buildings, and many of the most notable ones in New York were built by his firm.

Checked voiles, in two-tone effects, are exceptionally attractive for afternoon gowns when made with silk garniture.

SMITHS ERECT SKYSCRAPER.

The Smiths, great news-stand dealers of all England, have put a skyscraper in the newly opened street in London called Kingsway, and now the disfiguration of the great city has begun. The business "will be a high-class family, law and commercial one," and a special feature will be the firm's own hand-worked bindings. Also it houses W. H. Smith & Son's circulating library of 6,000 or 7,000 volumes.

Investigations in Order

What One Man Found Out by Asking Questions

The New York Doctors, whose offices are at 308-9-10 Colorado Bank Building, and who have been in practice in Colorado Springs for the past four years, have been called upon many times by the public to explain their method of treating chronic diseases, as they profess to be specialists in this class of work.

As a usual thing, when a patient calls on a doctor, the doctor asks the most of the questions, but it is not always so. People do not care to put themselves under the care of a physician nowadays without they know something about him, his success as a practitioner and his character. The climax of this questioning was reached by an Illinois lawyer the other day, who, probably by exercising his court room tactics, learned more about the NEW YORK DOCTORS' methods in an hour than he will be able to digest in a month.

He unhesitatingly turned the door knob of their reception room door and stalked into the presence of eight or ten well-dressed ladies and several men. All were pleasantly engaged in conversation and did not appear much like sick people. This seemed to surprise the gentleman from Egypt, but he soon learned that most of them had taken treatment for some time and were past the grunting stage. He asked the office attendant if he might see the consulting physician, and he was told that he might, but he would be obliged to wait for a few minutes, as the consulting physician was then engaged.

After due time he was shown into the consultation room, and he then put his galling (questioning) gun to work. "What do you charge for consultation?" Ans.: "Nothing, if you are interested in getting well." "Do you treat Chronic Diseases?" Ans.: "We make a specialty of treating Chronic Diseases of Men, Women and Children." Q.: "What are your methods of treating those diseases?" Ans.: "What do you mean?" Q.: "ARE YOUR METHODS 'EUROPEAN'?" Ans.: "OUR METHODS ARE EUROPEAN, American, Oriental, Occidental, Accidental (if you please), Japanese, Chinese or any other one (if need) we can get. To answer more fully and to the point, our methods comprise all that we have found to be good in all methods of treatment that we have investigated. For instance, as I will show you later, if you wish, that we are thoroughly equipped with all electrical appliances for the application of static, galvanic, faradic and combined currents of electricity, the violet ray, blue ray, and the lilac ray. Our electric laboratory," said the Doctor with a touch of pride in his voice, "is complete." "And then we have a machine known as the Chattanooga Vibrator, by the help of this machine we are able to administer a treatment known as 'Vibratory Stimulation,' good in all circulatory disturbances, misplacements, etc., and is often combined with Osteopathic treatment by our Osteopath; the results of which are similar. We also Cure RHEUMATISM with an apparatus we have by which a patient is placed in a dry atmosphere twice as hot as boiling water, and the rheumatism is actually sweated out of him. His head is left out where he can breathe the fresh air and he really enjoys his bath instead of looking forward to it with dread, as you might imagine." The Doctor stopped for breath, and the man from Illinois, thinking he had finished, was ready with another question. Q.: "Then you do not use medicine in your practice?" Ans.: "O, yes, in some cases we do, not in all. We cannot divorce drugs, but we do not depend entirely upon them, else we would not have use for our expensive equipment." Q.: "What school of medicine do you select your drugs from?" Ans.: "Any school, allopathic, homeopathic, or eclectic, that in our experience has been the best, drugs of all three schools will be found in our laboratories. We never write prescriptions, but furnish all drugs from our offices." Q.: "Do you take incurable case for treatment?" Ans.: "No, not unless we are urgently requested to by the unfortunate person's friends or relatives, and then we had rather not." Q.: "What diseases do you treat?" "It would take me a long time to name them over, but here are a few of them: Diseases of the nose, throat and chest, such as catarrh, asthma, tuberculosis, growths and the like; diseases of the stomach and digestive tract, such as dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach and bowels, enlarged stomach, gastritis and appendicitis; diseases of the kidneys and bladder; piles; diseases of women; diseases of men, and chronic diseases of children. We don't stir up rapid excitement by our cures. Our patients are not those that were literally blind, and now see. They might have been blind to the fact that we could cure them. They are not those that were deaf and now hear, except that they were deaf to their friends who urged them to try us. They do not sing our praises on the street corner, but rather they go home and tell their neighbors.

During this time the Doctor failed to see the point the stranger was trying to make, so he turned to him with a question or two, as he was getting weary. "What can I do for YOU? You look like rather a healthy person to be consulting a Doctor." Alas! It is not myself that needs your services, but my only brother, who, we fear, has consumption. I have come as an advance guard and I want you to explain what your IMPROVED FRENCH TRANSFUSION METHOD of TREATING CONSUMPTION is." The Doctor simply said, "Come with me," and led the way into the electro-therapeutic room. A patient was being prepared for treatment and his permission was obtained for the lawyer to see him take his treatment. The patient was put in position on a stool and a large static machine put in operation. The lawyer stood aghast when he saw a current of electricity passing through the patient's chest in the form of a lilac ray, or light actually shining through to the other side, and then the medicine, which is so deadly poison to tubercular bacilli, but such a boon to mankind, was rubbed on the chest. The muscles on the patient's chest twitched slightly, but he smiled and says: "It don't hurt, but kind of prickles sometimes."

The lawyer turned to the consulting physician and grasped his hand. "I am satisfied. My brother will be up for examination tomorrow morning."

The NEW YORK DOCTORS are in their offices every day except Sunday, from 8:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m., and from 7:00 to 8:00 in the evening. Offices: 308-9-10 Colorado Bldg.

WILL ASSIST FOREMAN

HALL AND CARPENTER TO GIVE LAW LECTURES.

New Head of Department of Political and Social Science at College Outlines Work.

Attorneys Henry C. Hall and Dunbar F. Carpenter of this city have been engaged for this year to assist Prof. C. F. Foreman, new head of the department of political and social science at Colorado college, in conducting the law course offered at the college. Mr. Hall will give a course of lectures on mining law, to be known in the bulletin as "Law G," and Mr. Carpenter will give a course of lectures on contracts, designated in the bulletin as "Law C." Mr. Hall's lectures deal with the mining laws of foreign countries, the general policy of the United States with regard to mining lands and all phases of state legislation and local district regulations that supplement the federal laws. Mr. Carpenter's lectures will consist of a two-hours course throughout the year. They will cover mutual assent, the expiration and revocation of office, contracts under seal, rights of beneficiaries and assignees, joint, several, alternative and conditional contracts; illegality, impossibility, duress, discharge of contracts and causes of action arising under them. Both of these courses will commence this week.

The course in law which the college conducts is both for the benefit of those students who intend to follow the practice of law as a profession and for those who may want a good understanding of the foundation principles on which jurisprudence is based. The course secures credit for the student for one year's work in all the principal law schools of the country.

Professor Foreman has been making extensive plans for this department in its relation both to law and to practical sociology. He intends to build up the department along three main lines—history, economics and law, and from these three studies it will be possible to make such a selection of subjects that a complete course in higher commercial education can be secured. This is the logical first step in the development of a strong commercial course, the need of which is being recognized by many of the leading educational institutions in the country. Aside from the courses that have usually been given there will this year be included courses in money and banking, finance, principles of sociology, problems of sociology and property and domestic relations, etc.

Besides the courses that are strictly legal, the following courses in economics and political science always receive credit toward the law degree: Elementary economics, a course that is required of all juniors; charities and corrections, labor problems, socialism, colonial policy, the economic and social history of the United States, and historical and comparative politics. These will all be offered either this year or in 1908-09.

Professor Foreman offers two courses in law, viz.: Course A, in elementary law, and course B, in American constitutional law. These are three-hour courses each continuing one semester. QUARANTINE REMOVED

EL PASO COUNTY STOCK FREE FROM DISEASE.

Cattle May Be Shipped Without Restriction.—Important Meeting Held at Court House.

After strenuous efforts to that end by the El Paso County Stockgrowers association, the state board of stock inspection has removed the quarantine on cattle in this county. Although the quarantine is removed only during the fall shipping season, it will not be reinstated if the board is shown that all the cattle in El Paso county are freed from mange.

The above statement made by Secretary E. McCrillis of the state board at a meeting of the El Paso County association in the court house building yesterday, was met with cheers by the members. They have claimed for months that the cattle in this county are free from mange or scab, and recently passed resolutions asking for the withdrawal of the quarantine, pointing out its injustice. The quarantine was placed on the cattle of this county simultaneously with a similar restriction on cattle in adjoining counties in the state, where mange prevailed.

Two Addresses Given.

Secretary McCrillis gave a comprehensive address before the association yesterday, explaining the aims of workings of the state board of cattle inspection. He said that during the last year 1,100 stray cattle were recovered by the board. They were all sold and the money held in trust for the owners. In this connection Mr. McCrillis urged that all cattle brands be recorded with the secretary of state, as well as with the county association, in order to facilitate the identification of stray stock.

Secretary Fred Johnsen of the Colorado Cattle and Horse Growers association also delivered an interesting address. He spoke of the new and improved methods of stock raising, and said that the old-time range raising of cattle is fast giving way to the new methods.

The association unanimously passed a resolution offering a standing reward of $100 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone stealing or killing cattle belonging to members of the organization.

For Better Roads.

Another resolution in behalf of good roads for this county was unanimously passed as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the El Paso County Stockgrowers association, request our county commissioners to make as liberal an appropriation as our county's finances will permit, for the improvement of our public highways in the county."

County Commissioners R. A. Banta, J. P. Madden and F. L. Rouse are all enthusiastic supporters of the Stockgrowers association, and are also in favor of good roads in this county, so that the above resolution will probably bear fruit.

Commissioners Commended.

A third resolution thanking the county commissioners for their action in using only pure-bred stock at the county farm was also passed. It is as follows:

"Resolved, By the El Paso County Stockgrowers association that we express our appreciation of the action of the board of county commissioners in using only pure-bred stock on the county farm and we heartily indorse their position in this matter as being to the best interest of the county and the taxpayers. As one of the greatest resources of this county will ultimately be pure-bred livestock, it is right that the county authorities show their confidence in the natural conditions and environment which will eventually make this section famous for its well-bred stock."

George Crowe, president of the association, presided over the meeting yesterday. Many new members have been received, and the new brand book will soon contain records of every brand in the county, judging from indications.

Chronic Diarrhoea Cured.

"My father has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhoea, and tried every means possible to effect a cure, without avail," writes John H. Zirkle of Philippi, W. Va. "He saw Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy advertised in the Philippi Republican and decided to try it. The result is, one bottle cured him, and he has not suffered with the disease for eighteen months. Before taking this remedy he was a constant sufferer. He is now sound and well, and although sixty years old, can do as much work as a young man." Sold by all druggists.

NO PAVING AT PRESENT

NOT ENOUGH SIGNATURES AND ACTION IS DEFERRED.

Matter Will Be Taken Up Again in Near Future if Conditions Warrant.

The question of paved streets for the business section of Colorado Springs has been deferred for the present, and will be taken up again when the proper time comes. The petitions which were circulated among property owners in the business section, asking the city council to create a paving district, have been withdrawn and the matter will remain in abeyance for awhile.

This action has been taken by those interested in the matter, including the Warren Brothers company of Boston, promoters of the bitulithic paving, because of the lack of sufficient signatures to establish a district at this time. The Warren Brothers company, according to an official of the concern who was in this city a few days ago, does not wish to be put in the light of forcing the paving question on Colorado Springs property owners, and has dropped the matter for the present.

L. M. Pfeiffer, who represented the company in promoting (securing signatures) for the bitulithic pavement in this city, has left Colorado Springs as a result of the visit of the Boston official. Enough signatures were secured to assure the paving of Tejon street between Vermijo and Pike's Peak avenue, together with Cucharas street between Nevada and Cascade avenue, but the company does not feel warranted in shipping its heavy machinery to this state to execute a contract for only five blocks of paving. The other paving companies are equally reluctant to take up a contract of this size.

SLANDEROUS TRUTHS.

Isaac Barrow.

There are slanderous truths as well as slanderous falsehoods; when truth is uttered with a deceitful heart, and to a base end, it becomes a lie. "He that speaketh truth," said the wise man, "showeth forth righteousness, but a false witness deceit." Deceiving is the proper work of slander; and truth abused to that end putteth on its nature, and will engage into like guilt.

MEASURING HEIGHT OF PEAK

Geological Survey Making New Map of This Region.—Work Nears Completion.

A new federal map of the Pike's Peak region will be finished in draft form probably next week and Richard T. Evans of the United States geological survey will begin running a level line to the Peak within a week which will officially settle the exact altitude of the mountain.

Three years ago the government made a survey of the Peak and the summit appears on the very western edge of the map.

"The government some time ago decided that a place so well known as Pike's Peak," said Mr. Evans, "should be properly platted, so a strip two and one-half miles wide by 33 miles long was added to the Peak map."

The new map, to be declared, will be the best one the officials ever printed of the Peak and its tributary territory. Half of the Cascade road, nearly all of the Gillette trail and the Short Line railroad to Beaver creek trestle are included in the new map.

Beginning on October 1 the geological survey level-man will begin running a line from Manitou to the Peak. This line will tie the Cripple Creek level line at Clyde and this will determine beyond all doubt the exact altitude of the Peak."

HOW TO WIN A "C"

NEW COLORADO COLLEGE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION RULES.

Members of Football, Baseball and Track Teams Must Work Hard to Get Their Letters.

"It has been practically decided that the new athletic constitution for the Athletic association at Colorado college will be presented to the students at 12:30 o'clock Friday afternoon of this week. The constitution is by far the best one that has ever been drawn up for the government of athletics at the college.

Several new clauses have been added to the constitution, which was explained in yesterday morning's Gazette. These take up, in the main, the duties and obligations of the managers and also explain in detail who shall be eligible to wear the college "C."

Regarding Elections.

The football captain will hereafter be elected at the close of the football season, by a majority of those entitled to wear the football "C" for that season; the baseball captain shall be elected at the close of the baseball season by the wearers of the baseball "C" for that season; the track captain will be elected by the wearers of the track "C" at the close of the track season, and the basketball captain will be elected at the close of the basketball season. In every election the manager will be permitted to be present, but will not be allowed to vote except in case of a tie.

Those Entitled to a "C."

All football players participating in at least one full half of two or more intercollegiate championship football games will be entitled to wear the football "C" for that season. The letter will be eight inches high and eight inches wide, orange in color, and is to be worn on a black jersey or sweater.

All baseball players participating in at least five full innings in three or more intercollegiate championship baseball games shall be entitled to wear the "C" except in cases where more than six games are played during the year, and that in that case two intercollegiate games will be sufficient to entitle a player to the baseball "C." The letter will be six inches high and six inches wide, and is to be of an orange color, worn on a black jersey or sweater.

All college men representing the college in the intercollegiate track meet will be entitled to wear the track team emblem, an oblique bard, color old gold. All men winning three or more points in the conference meet or five or more points in the intercollegiate dual track meets will be entitled to wear the track "C." Points won in the state meet shall count twice as much as points won in an intercollegiate dual meet. The track "C" will be seven and one-half inches in height, by three and one-half inches in width, oval in shape and orange in color. In all cases where letters have been conferred, the wearer will be allowed to wear bars of the same color within the letter, the number of bars to correspond to the number of years that the "C" has been conferred to the man. The manager of each athletic team will be entitled to a "C" the same as though he were a player or member of the athletic team.

Basketball and Tennis.

At the present time there is no basketball team at Colorado college, but plans are on foot to organize a team this year, and the new constitution provides for its support. All men representing the college in at least one full half of four or more intercollegiate basketball games will be entitled to wear the basketball emblem, which will consist of a six-inch black "C" with two three-inch black B's, one on either side of the "C", the "B's" to be orange in color. The emblem is to be worn on a black jersey or sweater. Bars will be allowed basketball players under the same condition as to members of other athletic teams. In every case the board of directors will have the privilege of granting the different emblems.

In all probability the constitution will be amended and the management of the Tennis association will be taken under the control of the Colorado College Athletic association. However, this will not be settled until after a meeting of the Tennis association is held and plans for the ensuing year are fully discussed.

GAUSS TAKE TROPHY

WINS SEPTEMBER GOLF CUP WITH SCORE OF 76.

Priliminary Round for Ambassador's Cup Will Be Played Next Saturday.

J. W. Gauss, by reason of his low score of 76, made the first Saturday of this month, won the September golf cup offered by the Town and Gown golf club. Mr. Gauss withdrew from yesterday's fourth round, but the lowest net score yesterday was 81, so that his score netted him the trophy.

Beginning next Saturday, the preliminary round for the Ambassador's cup, presented to the club by Bellamy J. Storer, will be played. Those making the eight lowest net scores will qualify next Saturday, and on the following Saturday, the four making the lowest net scores will qualify, eliminating the other four. On the third Saturday two will be eliminated by a similar process, leaving only two to fight it out on the fourth Saturday.

The first round for the October cup will also begin next Saturday. The player making the lowest net score on any Saturday will win the trophy, as in the case of the September cup won by Mr. Gauss.

Following is the score of yesterday's final round for the September cup:

	Gross.	Hdcp.	Net
H. A. Fisher	89	5	84
L. L. Aitken	94	10	84
E. J. Ulrich	95	10	85
J. H. Watt	109	14	95
S. L. Caldwell	104	15	89
J. F. Hubbell	102	10	—

DEER SEASON OPENS TUESDAY

Many Sportsmen Going Into the Mountains After Big Game. Law Has Been Changed.

A large number of Colorado Springs sportsmen will go into the mountains tomorrow and Tuesday so as to take advantage of the earliest moment at which deer can be legally shot, for the hunting season opens at midnight tomorrow night. This is the first season in many years that does and fawns are not protected by law, and the rule of the sportsman will be to shoot at a deer head, whether it bears horns or not. Owing to the fact that the does and fawns have been protected for many years, they have increased so that they outnumber the bucks in undue proportion, and the last legislature passed a law making the season open on males and females alike from October 1 to October 20.

As a result of the open season for does, the bucks will have a better chance for their lives, and when the season is over the disproportion between the males and the females will not be so marked. This will mean a great deal in the propagation of the species. According to the law, no hunter is allowed to shoot more than one deer, and the chances are that the majority slain will be does, as they are greatly in the majority. The average hunter is likely to shoot the first deer he sees, and if he brings down a doe, a buck may tread on his toes with impunity, for he can not shoot him without violating the law and incurring the danger of a penitentiary sentence. According to Deputy Game Commissioner C. W. Lake, a large number of does can safely be spared without endangering the herds, and the result will mean the ultimate benefit of the species.

SULLIVAN WINS FROM SQUIRES

Australian Again Suffers Defeat. "Twin" Awarded Fight in Nineteenth Round.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 28.—Australian "Bill" Squires, the heavyweight pugilist, who came to this country with the avowed intention of wresting the title of champion of the world from James Jeffries, went down to defeat a second time today when he was practically knocked out by Jack (Twin) Sullivan in the nineteenth round of what was to have been a 25-round glove contest.

The fight took place in the Mission street armory and was witnessed by a fair-sized crowd.

Squires showed very little improvement since his last appearance in the ring. He was strong, willing and game, but did not have the skill to land his blows. Had Sullivan been a first-class man, he would have knocked the Australian out early in the fight. As it was, he smashed Squires in the face and on the stomach all through the 19 rounds. Several times he had Squires groggy, but could not put him out. In the nineteenth round the Australian was bleeding and weak. Sullivan sent in a right and left to the jaw and Squires went down. He remained on the mat eight seconds, and then staggered to his feet. Another punch to the jaw sent him down again, but he was not knocked out. He got up, but was promptly sent down again. Referee Billy Roche then awarded the fight to Sullivan.

THE LAW OF GOOD FAITH.

Fisher Ames.

I see no exception to the respect that is paid among nations to the law of good faith. If there are cases in this enlightened period when it is violated, there are none when it is decried. It is the philosophy of politics, the religion of governments. It is observed by barbarians a whiff of tobacco smoke, or a string of beads, gives not merely binding force, but sanctity to treaties. Even in Algiers a truce may be bought for money; but, when ratified, even Algiers is too wise, or too just, to disown and annul its obligation. Thus we see neither the ignorance of savages nor the principles of an association for piracy and rapine, permit a nation to despise its engagements.

COLLEGE WINS GAME

TIGERS DEFEAT TERRORS BY NARROW MARGIN.

High School Football Team Puts Up Plucky Fight Against Heavy 'Varsity Eleven.

In a closely-contested game on Washburn field yesterday afternoon, the Colorado college Tigers defeated the Colorado Springs High school Terrors by the score of 5 to 0 in the first football game of the season for either of the teams. The teams seemed evenly matched, though the weight of the Tigers is almost 30 pounds more to the man than that of the Terrors. The Terrors surprised everyone by the way they held the heavy Tiger line and also by the way they succeeded in breaking up the college interference during the whole game. Merrison and Murphy were the star players for the High school team. J. Randolph showed up well at quarter and is sure to be one of the best high school players in the state in that position.

The college team did exceptionally good work, considering the time the men have been playing together. Morris, R. Morgan and C. Carey as backs put up a fast game, playing together as one man and breaking through the Terrors' line repeatedly. However, they were not always well supported and were seldom able to make good gains. Sherry at quarter did exceptionally well and will perhaps make the regular 'varsity team. Graham, the lightest man on the college team, played the game at left and made several brilliant tackles.

Time and time again both the Tigers and the Terrors tried the forward pass but with very little success. There was little fumbling during the game except when the forward pass was tried. Neither quarter made a fumble. The punting of Morrison for the Terrors and of Morrell for the Tigers was up to the standard of last year.

The High school won the toss, taking the north goal. The Tigers caught the ball near their own goal line and pushed it gradually toward the Terrors' line, but lost it after several scrimmages. The contest was being waged near the middle of the field when the first half was called.

In the second half the older team displayed more vim and strength, and after a series of line smashes "Tub" Morris was sent over the High school line for a touchdown. The Tigers failed to kick goal and the game was ended soon after, with the score 5 to 0 in favor of Colorado college.

Fully 1,000 enthusiastic rooters cheered for their favorites. The lineup:

COLORADO LEADS IN WHEAT.

From an Exchange.

When farmers touring the state here for a short time from other states where wheat is one of the great crops, see wheat growing on the Colorado farms, it is the signal for them to tell of the big yield of wheat made by them on their home acres and how far it outclasses any yield made by Colorado's acres.

Oftentimes the Colorado farmer who listens to them, while he knows that Colorado land will yield more than eastern land, must accept the statement of the visiting farmer as gospel because he has not the figures to refute it.

The department of agriculture has prepared a volume of statistics telling the yield by states of the different crops raised in the United States. A few facts about the wheat crop of Colorado, compiled from this volume by the Colorado State Commercial association, will prove interesting to the Colorado farmer. They are as follows:

During the year 1906 there were 8,266,538 bushels of wheat grown on 254,855 acres of land in this state, or an average yield of 32.5 bushels per acre.

The yield in other states for the same year, according to the government statistics, was: Wyoming, 28.7 bushels; Maine, 22.8 bushels; Nebraska, 22 bushels; Indiana, 20.7 bushels; Ohio, 20.4 bushels; Illinois, 19.5 bushels; Wisconsin, 16.3 bushels; South Dakota, 13.4 bushels; North Dakota, 13 bushels; Minnesota, 10.9 bushels.

The average yield per acre of wheat in 1897 in Colorado was only 24 bushels, and it is due to the careful selection of seed suited to the soil and climatic conditions that Colorado land now makes the highest average yield of any wheat land in the United States. And wheat is not the only crop in which Colorado leads.

GUIDE POST TO PHILADELPHIA.

From the New York Sun.

Staten Island has many wonders, not the least of which is the guidepost signs to direct travelers to Philadelphia. At every prominent crossing the notice is displayed in striking type: "Philadelphia—so many miles away." Visitors to that borough by the sea look and speculate.

"Have the residents of Richmond county the Philadelphia habit?" they ask. "Why not tell how far it is to Baltimore or Washington or Chicago, or just for a change, to New York? Why Philadelphia only?"

Chiefly because Philadelphia is best reached a automobile by a route which lies through Staten Island.

TALKS ON TEETH

CROOKED TEETH

What a disappointment it is when you meet a beautiful woman and are charmed at first with her appearance to see some horrible looking teeth the moment she opens her mouth. It destroys altogether the delightful impression already made and you are almost sorry you met her. The same is true of men as well as women. There is nothing that detracts so much from your beauty or appearance as defective, discolored, crooked, irregular or missing teeth. They counteract the pleasing effects of lovely complexion, regular features, beauty of form and other charms of person which you possess.

Beautiful, pearly, white, natural appearing teeth are delightful to look at and a great source of satisfaction. They add to the health and comfort as well as to the beauty of the fortunate possessor.

The wonderful success of Alvcolar dentistry, as practiced exclusively by the Rex Dental Co., 29 to 45, 728 16th St., Denver, becomes more pronounced every day. Every day new names are added to our long list of grateful patients. When we proclaimed to the profession and the public at large that we could replace missing teeth without the use of plates, of false teeth or bridge work and make them look just like beautiful, natural teeth; that we could straighten crooked teeth and repair decayed, discolored, chipped or broken teeth so that no one could ever detect that they ever had been worked on; that we could cure pyorrhoea and all other aggravated and distressing diseases of the mouth, teeth and gums when we made bold to claim to do such unheard of things, we encountered doubt and prejudice on every hand.

We have demonstrated by years of successful practice, however, that we can do everything claimed satisfactorily and without the pain incident to old-time methods. Some of the very dentists who were loudest in their denunciations of our methods at first are now sending their most difficult and stubborn cases to us for treatment. We are enabled by means of our complete and latest equipment to perform these high-class services at as low price as other high-class dentists charge for common work. Our prices are in reach of all. We make no charge whatever for examination. If you have any trouble or disease of the teeth, mouth or gums, call at once. It will not cost you a cent to find out just what we can do for you, as all examinations and consultations are free.

We especially invite those who are suffering from the most serious troubles which other dentists have been unable to cure. If you are unable to call, write fully stating the nature of your trouble, and we will answer your letter promptly.

We desire that all who are suffering from any trouble of the teeth, gums or mouth, shall read our beautiful new booklet on "Alvcolar Dentistry," which we have recently completed. It is mailed free on request or presented to all who call. Call or address Rex Dental Co., suite 29 to 45, 728 16th street, Denver.

Colorado City News

At a linen shower given for Miss Mabel Colbert at her home, 15 South Third street, Friday evening, it was formally announced for the first time that her marriage to Mr. Lee Coats, of Colorado Springs, will take place the evening of October 16. The shower was a surprise, not only for Miss Colbert, but also for Mr. Coats, who was spending the evening at her home. About 20 young people were present during the evening. A luncheon was served by Mrs. Colbert. Those present were the Misses Amy and Julia Beyle, Sophia Hockensen, Etta Rohman, Mary Schilling, Ellen Riese, Kittie Barker, May Malone, Ethel Brauer, May Croper, and the Messrs. E. P. Briggs, Wilmer Pushal, Albert Keys, C. F. Howell and Barnard Harp.

Celebrating her tenth birthday anniversary, Miss Gladys Barnhart gave a party September 24, at the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Barnhart, 222 East Hagerman street, to a number of her young friends. Among those present were Grace Sonneckson, Guy Arterburn, Blanche Woods, Vernon Brown, Martha Brockman, Gladys Robinson and Mary Morrison.

Colorado City seems for the present to be immune from fires, not a call having been sent into the fire department from within the city limits since July 22, when the hotel and store building at Colorado and Eleventh streets were destroyed. The department responded to the call of the Golden Cycle mill, outside the city limits, on August 7, but have not had a real run to a fire since that time.

While at work in a car in the Colorado Midland yards yesterday afternoon, O. S. Gilmore of Colorado Springs was seriously injured by a bar of railroad iron falling upon his back. Dr. L. A. Miller, who was summoned, had the injured man sent to St. Francis hospital. An examination showed that Gilmore is in a dangerous condition, but it is believed he will recover.

The funeral of Mrs. Minnie B. Hand was held yesterday afternoon from the residence, 109 North Fifth street, conducted by the Rev. Grant Teeters. The remains were taken to the former home at Lamont, Okla., for interment. The funeral party comprised the husband, William Hand, the three children and the sister, Miss Edmiston, all of whom will return to Colorado City.

The opening of the deer season on October 1 is attracting the attention of a number of Colorado City hunters. A hunting party that left yesterday for the Black mountain district comprised William Fisher, Al. Perrine, Frank Stewart, B. S. Bates, C. T. Moser, A. T. Baxter and M. L. Phelps.

To satisfy a garnishment claim held by I. A. Foote & Co., against R. E. Chapman, 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Chapman Railway Patents company were yesterday sold at public auction by Constable O. E. Kimsey to C. D. Taylor for 6½ cents a share.

S. D. Wirick yesterday bought the residence property at 217 Jackson street, from George Jones of Greeley, for $2,000.

The library board of directors met yesterday for the transaction of routine business. The report of the librarian shows that 943 persons visited the library during the month closing September 28, and that 346 books were loaned.

W. T. Hannon, wife and sister, Mrs. Mellinger, of Marceline, Mo., who are visiting Mrs. Hannon's sister, Mrs. J. E. Moore, leave Monday for California. Mr. Hannon is chief dispatcher for the Frisco railroad at Marceline.

The school board will meet Tuesday evening. The first month of school closed Friday. Reports of the teachers show a slight increase in attendance over the corresponding period of last year.

Miss Minnie Wheeler, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Marcus Shelmire, left yesterday for Denver. She expects soon to visit Glenwood Springs and Aspen.

Mrs. C. D. Taylor returned yesterday from Cedar Hill, N. M., where for the past month she has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Westen.

The best furniture in America looks like plunder in a gray. Get a moving van of C. M. Sherman, Colorado City.

After several weeks' vacation, Miss Cora Baker has resumed her duties as bookkeeper with I. A. Foote & Co.

Miss Lulu Johnson of Riverside, N. M., formerly of Colorado City, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Martin Drake.

Mrs. W. B. Sublette and children leave Tuesday for a month's visit with her brother at Sabinal, Tex.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Burget of Fayette, Ia., are guests of Mrs. L. A. Miller for the winter.

Plans are being formed for the organization of a lodge of Homesteaders in this city.

The Order of the Eastern Star will meet next Thursday night to initiate candidates.

Mr and Mrs. C. A. Ellis leave Monday for a month's visit to Burnett, Kan.

O. Martin and family are visiting in Denver.

D. Minium is seriously ill.

JEWELS AND GEMS.

In an ancient cathedral at Genoa a vase of immense value has been preserved for 600 years. It is cut from a single emerald. Its principal diameter 12½ inches. It is kept under several locks, the keys of which are in different hands, and it is rarely exhibited in public, then only by an order from the senate. When exhibited it is suspended round the neck of a priest by a cord, and no one is allowed to touch it but him. It is claimed that this vase is one of the gifts which were made to Solomon by the queen of Sheba.

It is said that the most magnificent and costly pearl necklace in the world is now the property of the Countess Henckel. It is made of three historical necklaces, each of which enjoyed considerable celebrity in former times. One of them, valued at $60,000, was sold to the countess by grandee of Spain, and it is known as the "necklace of the virgin of Afokha;" the second belonged to the ex-queen of Naples, and the third was the famous necklace belonging to the Empress Eugenie, and by her lately sold to a London jeweler for $100,000.

Pearls imported from Australia and Panama are all of medium and large size. Generally speaking, the Indian pearls command the highest price, because of their superior form, many of them being perfectly round, and their brilliant luster.

It has been computed that there are $2,000,000,000 in gold and jewels at the bottom of the sea on the route between England and India.

New shades in silks are cedar, cinnamon and russet. Satin foulards are seen in navy blues, brown and black, and many of them have polka dots of various sizes.

Exclusive Millinery at Hibbard's

Paris milliners are conceded artists—their creations are art; but breadth of conception grows under stimulus. The age leans to luxury—and Paris milliners have caught the contagion.

Certainly our past season has been so productive of hat models which, in their richness of adornment, beauty of design, and extreme splendor of color and contrast, seem to have struck the highest note of refined elegance.

The best Parisian ideas are here. Besides the Parisian conceptions, we are showing many clever adaptations and modifications for which our own milliners are to be credited.

Suits of Character and Distinction

Newest Autumn and Winter Modes from $15.00 up.

Tomorrow we will show a wonderfully interesting and complete line of women's street, semi-dress and dress, tailor-made suits. The range of prices is broad enough to completely satisfy the requirements of those wanting a moderate priced suit as well as those who are not particular about the price.

At $15. These suits are without doubt the best obtainable in the city for the money. They are not ordinary values, but suits that sell regularly at $17.50 to $22.50. Mannish jacket and coat style—in various lengths; plain blue, brown and black cheviot serges with silk lined jacket, banded button cuffs, and single and double vent back. The skirts are made very full with box pleats and multiple tucks. Some suits at this price in handsome stripes and novelty checks, in new browns and mixtures.

At $17. In these you will concede the style and material goodness that you will see in much higher priced garments shown elsewhere. They include a good range of styles including the popular mannish jacket cut 27 inches long, made of serges and novelty materials, in blues, browns, greens, etc. Made with turn-back and plain cuff, with and without fancy collars. The skirts are made in the very latest and most attractive fashion with pleats, folds and horizontal folds. These are regularly worth $20.00 and more.

At $20. An unsurpassed variety of these, none of which are worth less than $25.00. Blues and browns in newest autumn shades, blacks and others in plain effects, novelty checks, dainty silk woven pin stripes and mixtures, made in jacket and new coat styles averaging 26 inches, made with two and three button-through front, with and without velvet collar and cuffs. The skirts are made with many pleats, while some are prettily box pleated.

At $25. At this price we are showing the best values that we have ever offered, unequaled elsewhere at $27.50 to $32.50 including every imaginable weave, style and color, in loose, semi-loose and snug-fitting effects—the lengths of coats and jackets range from 26 to 36 inches. There are single and double breasted ideas, with round and square cut fronts—such models as are being shown in the leading New York shops today. You must not fail to see these at twenty-five dollars.

STUDYING IRRIGATION METHODS

Prominent Kansas Farmer Here to Get Pointers From El Paso County Ranchmen.

Joseph Homan, one of the leading irrigation farmers of Kansas, and one of the wealthiest ranchmen in that state, arrived in Colorado Springs last night. He will investigate irrigation methods in this section of Colorado.

Mr. Homan represents a number of Kansas men who are considering the feasibility of establishing big settlements on the plains of eastern Colorado.

Leading real estate men of Colorado Springs will place their services at the disposal of Mr. Homan, and they are confident that he will make a favorable report on irrigation farming in this state.

"We have progressed much in irrigation farming in Colorado within the last few years," said one of the most prominent real estate men in the city last night, speaking of the visit of Mr. Homan. "We have solved the question of getting water, of storing it and of using it when it is needed. Of course, there can be no crop failures under these circumstances. Then we have the healthiest and pleasantest climate in the world. One of our irrigated acres will raise fully double the amount of agricultural products that one here will produce in the east, not even excepting Kansas. We need hundreds of hustling, wide-awake ranchmen in eastern Colorado and we hope to interest Mr. Homan and his progressive Kansas friends."

Mr. Homan will begin his inspection of ranches in El Paso county Monday morning.

BRILLIANT STUDENT DROWNED

Rev. Arthur E. Mann, who is reported to have drowned near Kuling, China, while attempting to rescue his fellow missionary, Rev. Warren B. Seabury, was a brilliant student at Yale in the class of 1899, but the chief promise of unusual things from him was the production a year ago of a dramatic poem which created surprise even among those who knew him and which called forth unstinted praise from seasoned critics, who heralded a poet of real power.

SPEAKS THREE TIMES TODAY

Dr. Crafts to Deliver Addresses at Y. M. C. A., First Congregational and First Presbyterian.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts of Washington, D. C., superintendent of the International Reform bureau, will speak at the Y. M. C. A. men's meeting at 4 o'clock this afternoon on "Moral Victories Won and Waiting." He will also speak at the First Congregational church, this morning at 11 o'clock on "A Worldwide War on the Four Big Evils." This evening at 7:30 o'clock he will speak at the First Methodist church on "Living and Dying Nations."

Dr. Crafts has been delivering addresses at various meettings in this region for the last four or five days. He will leave tomorrow for Denver and the northern part of the state.

A NEW REAL ESTATE FIRM

J. D. Peabody and P. B. Jennings have established a real estate and insurance office in the Mining Exchange building. The new firm will handle real estate in all its details, including buying, selling, renting, etc. They have also secured the agency for some of the leading fire and life insurance companies. Mr. Peabody has been engaged in the real estate business in California, while Mr. Jennings for a number of years was interested in the real estate business in New York city. Both gentlemen are very well known in this city, and their many friends wish them success in their new venture.

JEWISH NATIONAL MOVEMENT

Subject Will Be Discussed by Able Speakers Today.

An interesting discussion on the "Jewish National Movement" will take place at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the church at the corner of West Kiowa and North Seventh streets, under the auspices of the Sons of Israel association. The Jewish national movement is considered the most important movement undertaken by the Jewish people for centuries, and a discussion of the subject by able speakers promises to make this gathering very instructive and entertaining. There will be no admission fee and the public is invited.

SEN. SCOTT TALKS POLITICS

Says South Will Support Roosevelt's Candidate—Taft Seems to Be in the Lead.

That the southern states will favor Roosevelt's candidate for the presidency is the opinion of Senator Nathan B. Scott of West Virginia, who, with Mrs. Scott, is in Colorado Springs, the guest of William Lennox at 1001 North Nevada avenue. Senator Scott is a brother of Mrs. Lennox.

"Secretary Taft is probably the strongest candidate at the present time," said Mr. Scott, "and the chances are that the southern delegations to the national convention will be instructed to support the candidate favored by Roosevelt. Cannon, Knox and Hughes are all fairly strong in the south but Taft seems to be the choice of the administration. As far as Roosevelt is concerned, I think he will stick by his decision not to be a candidate again, but that does not alter the fact that the people want him and if they can't get him they will take the man he favors. On the Democratic side Judge Gray of Delaware is mentioned as a candidate with Governor Johnson of Minnesota as a running mate."

"The south as a whole is too busy developing its resources to take very much interest in politics," said the senator. "There is no doubt that our part of the country is developing more rapidly than any other part of the United States and the best of it is that the southerners are doing the work with their own money. We are building new railways, developing new coal fields and taking out some of the fine timber that has been held in reserve for years. The south is going ahead as never before and to a large extent is leaving politics to take care of itself."

Senator and Mrs. Scott will remain in this city for several days and will then go to Mexico City, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Lennox, the latter of whom is now in California. The party will spend some weeks in the southern republic and will be entertained by D. E. Thompson, ambassador of the United States to that country.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

W. H. Day, formerly general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Colorado Springs, but now a member of the secretarial force of the international committee, will arrive here Thursday and spend two or three days in the interest of the International Y. M. C. A. convention at Washington, D. C., November 22 and 24.

The Y. M. C. A. expects to open its new social room within the next two weeks. The Van Briggle tiling donated by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence P. Dodge is being set. The furniture and draperies will arrive this week.

The seat sale at the Opera house for the Wendling lecture, Thursday evening, the opening number of the Y. M. C. A. Star course, will start Tuesday.

NEWS OF THE LOCAL COURTS

Mrs. Lillie M. Ralston, widow of William H. Ralston, who was kiled in the automobile wreck in this city, September 17, has been made administratrix of her husband's estate by Judge Robert Kerr of the probate court. Mrs. Ralston was given letters of administration on filing bond of $3,000. The estate consists of household furniture, in addition to a third interest in the Standard Electric company of this city.

Alleging nonsupport, Lizzie Jones has filed application in the county court for divorce from William Jones. The couple were married in Durango, July 5, 1905.

W. C. T. U. IS DISCUSSED

Home and Education Department of Woman's Club Meets.

The first meeting of the home and education department of the Woman's club was held in the San Luis school building with the chairman, Mrs. James B. Gregg, presiding. Miss Brinley spoke on the work and aims of the Young Women's Christian association with the view to creating more interest in the local organization.

A number of announcements were made. There will be no meeting of the art and literature department next Wednesday, as so many of the club women will attend the state convention in Pueblo.

Next Saturday afternoon the first cooking demonstration will be given at 3 o'clock in the San Luis school building. Sponge cake will be demonstrated by Mrs. Owen Dodge; ice cream, by Mrs. O. E. Memenway; cooked ice cream, by Mrs. J. H. White; and sandwiches, by Mrs. J. A. Morrison.

Tuesday, October 8, the social science class will meet with Mrs. C. B. Ferrin, 224 East Willamette avenue.

Wednesday October 9 a regular meeting of the social science department will be held at the usual time and place.

Thursday, October 10, the art and literature study class will meet with Mrs. Belle Jacobs, 18 East Monument street.

A neat jumper suit, made of fancy plaid taffeta, has a semi-gored skirt tucked to the knee. The waist is tucked back and front and is trimmed with a contrasting color.

NO NEGOTIATIONS PENDING

Periodical Report About Street Car Company Denied.

The periodical report that negotiations are in progress for the sale of the street car system of this city was published yesterday in the afternoon papers of this city and Denver, the regulation denial following.

It was stated that the Denver Gas and Electric company, representing the McMillan syndicate, is negotiating for the purchase of the power plant and railway system of the Colorado Springs and Interurban Railway company. Carl S. Chamberlin, an executor of the Stratton estate, and a director and also treasurer of the street car company, said last night:

"There is absolutely nothing in the report. There are no negotiations in progress for the sale of the street car system to the Denver Gas and Electric company or to any other company."

Attorney D. P. Strickler of the Stratton estate also emphatically denied the rumor.

Personal Mention

[illegible]

Mrs. [illegible] returned from an extended visit with relatives and friends in Point of Pueblo and Salt Lake City.

Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] of Pasadena, Cal., formerly residents of this city, are spending a few days in the city for a few days.

Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Philip [illegible] mother, Mrs. M. Ryan, left on a visit to Cripple Creek on the south [illegible] Monday morning.

Miss Cora E. Eudley [illegible] for Detroit and other eastern cities to spend the winter. She will stop en route in Denver to visit at the homes of Judge [illegible] Stewart and Lyman [illegible].

Thomas F. Walsh, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Evelyn L. Walsh, and a party of friends came to Colorado Springs from Denver last evening in Mr. Walsh's touring car and are guests at the Antlers hotel. The other members of the party were Mr. and Mrs. Crawford Hill, Denver; George Barry, Washington, and Bradish Johnson, New York city. The party will spend today in the city.

SAN LUIS VALLEY FAIR

Will Be Best Ever Held in That Part of State.

The fifth annual meeting of the San Luis valley fair will be held at Monte Vista, October 2, 3 and 4.

Great preparations have been made to make this the biggest and best fair ever held in southern Colorado. The agricultural exhibits will be extensive. The agricultural hall covers a floor space of over 10,000 square feet and will be filled from top to bottom with the products of the soil from the San Luis valley. Large premiums are offered for such exhibits.

Some of the special events of the San Luis valley fair will be horse racing in which are entered some of the best horses in the state; broncho busting, wild horse race, balloon ascension by Frank Frazier of Denver, exhibits of pure-bred cattle, horses, hogs, sheep and fowls. No country in the world can produce better stock than the San Luis valley. In the past few years special attention has been paid to the raising of pure-bred stock, and the exhibition at the fair will far surpass anything ever attempted in that section of Colorado.

Reduced rates are made over all roads from Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, and special trains will be run daily from Antonito, Walsenburg and Creede.

TOT RISKS LIFE FOR TEDDY BEAR

From the Chicago Examiner.

The love of a child for a "Teddy bear" Tuesday night overcame childish fear of fire and smoke at the Palmer house blaze and led a little 7-year-old girl to brave death by suffocation and climb six flights of stairs in the hotel to rescue her woolly bedfellow.

The child, whose affection for her fuzzy, loose-jointed, odd-looking pet would not allow her to enjoy her own safety, after she had been carried to the street by her father, while her beloved bear was in danger, is little Miss Catherine Harris, daughter of W. H. Harris, of Minneapolis, a wealthy mine owner in Arizona.

All the way down the stairs, though, the child cried broken-heartedly for her Teddy bear, and the moment she was released from her father's arms she watched her chance and slipped past policemen, bellboys and all employes of the hotel who were guarding the entrance to the stairs. Up she climbed six long flights to her room, where, snuggling in her bed, she found her treasured pet.

Then, even as her father had done with her, she grasped it close in her arms and through stifling smoke made her way again to the street and her parent's side before he knew that she had left him.

Irwin Bruce and Eddie Hill

Are Running Close Race for Motorcycle

Irwin Bruce or Eddie Hill. Which? One or other of these two carriers for The Gazette will be the winner of the Apache motorcycle, worth $310 and presented by The Gazette to the carrier getting the largest number of subscriptions in the 60-day campaign which is now just half over. All of the carriers made valiant efforts during the first four weeks to win the coveted prize, and the most of them made a splendid showing, but as in all contests of this nature the race soon narrowed down to a few and now stands between the two boys mentioned. Both are making every effort to win and are being backed by their respective friends with an enthusiasm which the management of The Gazette did not anticipate when the contest was started.

Irwin Bruce—12,460.
Eddie Hill—8,635.

These figures show how the two contestants stand and while Bruce is somewhat in the lead at present, the next few days may tell a different story, for day in and day out they have been running neck and neck in the race and either one may score a few thousand points at any time. Irwin Bruce is a solicitor of unusual ability. He is the son of J. H. Bruce, district manager of the Bankers Life association, and it is safe to say that if he should turn his attention to insurance with the same vim he is showing in the newspaper line, there would be but few uninsured men, women or children in the city within 60 days.

Eddie Hill is not a whit behind his rival when it comes to the get-up-and-go business and he had the faculty of getting subscriptions at a rapid rate. He will give young Bruce the race of his life. Eddie comes by his "smoothness" naturally for he is the nephew of Alderman John Hill and he goes after business with the same compelling smile that his uncle uses in going after the voters.

The Apache motorcycle is a "beaut" and the boy who wins will be able to bestride the best steed in the city, for the Apache is recognized as among the best of its kind made. The machine was manufactured by Brown and Beck of Denver, who are in the van in the motorcycle line. The local agents are Stratton and Reade of 110 East Huerfano street.

The contest will close on Friday, November 1, and in the meantime it is certain that there are two boys in this city who will not let the grass grow under their feet. Watch for a record breaking finish and the winning of the motorcycle by an eyelash.

EDDIE HILL

IRWIN BRUCE

MRS. PALMER BUYS A CASTLE

Hereafter She Will Make Her Home in Ancient Seat of Penryhns.

From the New York Press.

Mrs. Potter Palmer henceforth will pass little time in Chicago. As it was in that city her husband made his millions, she has held it her duty to spend at least a few months in every year within its borders, not only that part of her income might be bestowed on the tradesmen, but that society might have the benefit of association with herself.

But the ever young widow contemplates cutting the months down to weeks. She is reported to be about to close a contract for the purchase of Penrhyn castle, near Bangor, and hereafter will put in about 10 months of the year in the United Kingdom. The castle is the ancient seat of the Penryhns, and is one of the finest in Edward's realm. Its suites of drawing rooms, reception rooms, libraries and other apartments are described as "nobly imposing." There are 30 bedrooms. Possibly Mrs. Palmer will sleep in a different one each week, to get her money's worth. She will have 29,000 acres of ground over which to shoot, if she cares to enter the ranks of the Dianas. Of the 29,000 acres 2,000 are grouse moor. So the Chicago society woman may have the satisfaction of shooting the grouse to be served on her own table.

STATUE TO GENERAL HERKIMER

A statue of General Nicholas Herkimer, executed by Burr C. Miller and paid for by his father, ex-Senator Warren Miller, was unveiled at Herkimer, N. Y., on the anniversary of the Revolutionary battle of Oriskany, which resulted in the defeat of Colonel St. Leger, who had come from Canada under orders to march through the Mohawk valley to Albany, there to join General Burgoyne, who was to come by way of Lake Champlain. The defeat of St. Leger at Oriskany sent his army back to Canada, and later Burgoyne was defeated at Saratoga. The Miller statue received "honorable mention" in the Paris Salon this year.

A PEER WHO STARTS WOMEN'S FASHIONS

From Tit-Bits.

Entomologist, sportsman, agriculturist and politician, Lord Walsingham, who recently celebrated his sixty-fourth birthday, is "several single gentlemen rolled into one," and has a variety of interests denied to the average man. His collection of moths and butterflies is the largest and most important in the world, and by his generosity is the property of the nation, to whom it was conveyed by deed of gift in 1901. A large part of it is in the Natural History museum, at South Kensington, and it is a curious and little known fact that women's fashions are directly indebted to Lord Walsingham and his collection. Dressmakers and designers of court gowns go to the drawers and cases of butterflies and moths to study new combinations and contrasts of color, subtle shades of nature and harmonies of tone, which are to be beheld and studied there, and there alone.

WHY GO ABROAD FOR MINERAL SPRING CURES?

From the New York Herald.

The foreign spa treatment of disease has in fact become a well developed business of its own, is managed on business principles, and is very prosperous accordingly. In such respects America can take some profitable lessons in the development of its mineral springs and health resorts. In this country there is an embarrassment of riches in both respects.

Not only here can be found every variety of climate, but every variety of water. With few exceptions, however, no great care or pains is taken to develop the resources so ready at hand. There is some reason for this in the want of encouragement in such directions.

Americans, as a rule, are not responsive to home efforts for their comfort and benefit. They are a wandering set, as a rule, get quickly tired of one place and have no settled stability of purpose. A watering place, a spa or a mountain resort is popular and fashionable one season and is neglected the next. A change is a matter of sentiment or whim rather than a reality of betterment, but one abroad we willingly submit to different conditions, become strangely amenable to a discipline we would not bear elsewhere.

This is the hold foreign "cures" have on us. We look upon the foreign doctor who directs the spa with ridiculous awe. He exacts all sorts of things and we obey him to the letter. He times us by the clock and measures us in the balance of his uncompromising requirements. The water must be drunk in just such quantities and at just such times. We must eat only such things as he commands. We must rest and exercise as he directs, and it is a machine-work method from beginning to end.

Because we obey the letter we are benefited. If we stop to think we can see that the accessories of his treatment are more important than the imaginary essential ones. The waters, good as they may be in their place, get the credit which regulated diet, judicious exercise and proper rest really deserve.

If we would do the same thing at home at our various spas we, in the main, could get the same results; at least, we could try our own "cures" for comparatively longer periods and at much less expense.

Nor need we be much at a loss in making our selections. Our town healing springs are widely distributed in very accessible regions. We are particularly rich in hot springs, which are partly already in use and partly awaiting development. Besides these there are hundreds of others of every variety, each one of which can fairly compare with any similar ones abroad. So why need the poor or the stay-at-home man complain that such "cures" are not within his reach?

About 10,000 nets are in use during the herring season by the 800 fishing smacks of the Netherlands. A net lasts about three seasons, but owing to losses from storms and other causes between 40,000 and 50,000 new nets are purchased annually.

Societies and Clubs

There will be a stated assembly of Zabud council No. 8, R. & S. M., Tuesday evening for work in the R. M. degree. The members are earnestly requested to attend. Visitors are welcome.

The Cemetery Aid association will meet with Mrs. J. W. Atkinson Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. All interested in the organization are urged to be present.

Frances Willard union carried out an interesting program at the home of Mrs. Geiger, in Roswell, on Thursday afternoon. There was a large attendance. The union will meet with Mrs. William Rankington, 315 East Costilla street, next Thursday afternoon.

Reports on the Head camp's action in the matter of dues on members and other matters pertaining to the actions of the Seattle meeting will be made at the meeting of Pike's Peak camp, W. O. W., next Tuesday night. Head Clerk J. C. Lindsay will address the camp October 15. The camp plans a great winter campaign and has their suggestions of the head officers ready to submit to members.

RESORT DOING BIG BUSINESS

Cliff Dwellers Ruins Will Be Open All Winter.—Company Issues Handsome Booklet.

Among the resorts in the Pike's Peak region that are still open and doing a good business are the Manitou Cliff Dwellers ruins which have proved so popular an attraction during the season. The Santa Clara and Navajo Indians are still at the ruins but this will be the last day for visitors to enjoy this feature, as Manager W. S. Crosby will send them back to their reservations tomorrow for the winter. The resort, however, will be open all winter.

The Indians have proved a great attraction on account of their clever weaving and their ability to make fancy souvenirs in the way of silver spoons and other articles from Mexican dollars, and their skill in manufacturing small pieces of jewelry. In the weaving of the Navajo rugs and blankets and the manufacturing of the jewelry, etc., there is absolutely no chance for fake, for the work is done right under the eyes of visitors. Any person who wishes a beautiful souvenir may have one made on the spot by giving the Indians a silver dollar or other silver coin and by an art known only to themselves the thing is forthcoming in an incredibly short space of time as beautifully wrought as could be done with the most intricate machinery.

The ruins, and the many strange freaks of geological formation to be seen in the Garden are alone well worth the price of admission and are not only entertaining but highly instructive.

A most artistic booklet with a number of excellent illustrations on glazed paper has just been issued by the Cliff Dwellers Ruins company. It is entitled "Historical Facts of the Ancient Cliff Dwellers and a Glimpse of the Ruins and Canon at Manitou," and is not only a handsome specimen of the publisher's art but a splendid advertisement of Colorado Springs and Manitou. The historical part of the book was written by Capt. Cecil A. Dean of Denver, the eminent archeologist, who, during the last 40 years, has made extensive explorations among the Cliff Dwellers.

On invitation of Mr. Crosby a number of members of The Gazette editorial and business departments visited the Cliff ruins and the surrounding scenic attractions on Friday and were entertained by the management.

ARMY UNIFORMS

From the Boston Transcript.

To change a uniform is always a more serious thing than appears at first glance to civilians. There are so many associations that cluster about a uniform, it exerts such a stimulating influence on its wearer, and is such an incentive to professional pride, that governments are usually very slow to yield in the matter to anything but the most convincing arguments of convenience. There are regiments in Europe which wear some articles of dress modeled on the fashion of a past century in commemoration of great deeds done by them when these were in the full height of military fashion. The uniforms of our West Point cadets, strangely archaic according to army standards of today, preserve the memory of the valor of Scott's soldiers in the War of 1812, who were clad in gray simply because the United States had not enough blue cloth to clothe them according to regulations. The herring-bone facings and heavy brass buttons of the cadet coats came down from 1812, and only a few years ago the government paid a further homage to tradition by giving to the West Point battalion the old-fashioned shako, chin-strap and all, although that heavy headgear had long been obsolete in our service.

Drinking Men Not Wanted

The above sign is now seen in many shops and offices in this city, because drinking men are unreliable.

Competition is too keen and life is too strenuous for an employer to keep men on his payroll whose nerves are unsteady and whose brains are not clear.

Every line of business is beginning to close its doors to drinking men.

Drunkenness is a disease and the most diseases—has its remedy. Orrine is the reliable treatment and is sold under a positive guarantee to effect a cure or every penny will be refunded. Orrine is in two forms: No. 1, which can be used without the patient's knowledge in tea, coffee or food; and No. 2 for those who wish to be cured.

The guarantee applies to both forms. Mailed in plain sealed package on receipt of $1.00. Write for free booklet. Mailed in plain sealed envelope. The Orrine Co., Ltd., Washington, D. C. [illegible]

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1907.

OUR PURE CITY WATER.

ONLY people who have lived where the municipal water supply lacks much of being what it should be, which is the case in most Eastern cities, can fully appreciate the purity of the water furnished by the Colorado Springs water system. In nearly every Eastern city there is a serious water problem, not as to quantity, for usually the supply is unlimited, but as to quality. Washington has spent millions of dollars on a filtration plant which it was forced to build by the rapidly increasing death rate from typhoid fever, but even after being filtered, Potomac River water is abominable stuff hardly fit for human consumption. Philadelphia has had a like experience, the only difference being that the amount spent on the filtration plant was much larger. Chicago is forced to pump her city water from intakes situated several miles out in the lake in order to avoid contamination, and though the supply is purer than is possessed by most of the large cities it nevertheless is not to be compared to our mountain water.

New York's difficulties in getting good water are of long standing, and now that the supply is running short the city is preparing to spend vast sums building reservoirs in the Catskills and piping the water into the city. The worst water of all is that taken from the sluggish streams of the Mississippi Valley. Stir a half-teaspoonful of dust into a glass of Colorado Springs water and you have a pretty fair imitation of the stuff which the people are compelled to drink in St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Cincinnati, Louisville, Memphis—in fact in every city and town that derives its water supply from the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, or any of the other muddy streams in that part of the country.

We do not mean that in all of the places named the water is actually discolored, though in some of them it is not merely discolored but so full of impurities that a thick sediment is soon deposited on the bottom of a vessel in which it is left standing. In some of the larger cities filtration plants have been built at enormous expense which clarify the water but do not always rid it of the organic impurities which cause disease. Even when the water is clear and free from these impurities it is more than likely to be so strongly impregnated with lime as to be very disagreeable for domestic uses.

SUPERIORITY OF COLORADO SPRINGS WATER.

It is only by remembering these various kinds of water troubles suffered by nearly every other community in the land that we can fully appreciate our own blessings. In Colorado Springs the water possesses three distinct points of superiority—it is perfectly clear, it is free from organic impurities, and it is soft. The boast which the circus faker makes of his red lemonade can be made of the Colorado Springs Springs water—"the more you drink the more you want"—but with the important difference that in the case of the water it is strictly true. It is derived from sources far up in the mountains, above any human habitation, and so isolated that the danger of contamination is very slight. Whatever danger there is, however, is carefully guarded against, and the result is a municipal water supply which comes as near to being absolutely pure as it is possible to attain anywhere. Barring the cases of typhoid brought here for treatment Colorado Springs has always enjoyed almost complete immunity from this disease—a fact which in itself is excellent proof of the purity of the water.

Familiarity does not always breed contempt, but it breeds indifference, and most of us have come to regard this blessing of pure water too much as a matter of course, forgetting that it is peculiar to Colorado Springs and a few other places fortunately situated close to high mountain ranges.

THE FRENCH TRIUMPH IN MOROCCO.

ONLY a few days ago the prediction was being made that France had a real war on its hands in the Moroccan affair, but General Drude's succession of victories over the tribesmen has dissipated the war cloud into thin air, and now Morocco has a fairly good chance of soon enjoying the blessings of peace. The defeat of the Moors at Casablanca has aroused much satisfaction in Europe, and probably nowhere more than in France, for a war with these fierce men of the desert is no holiday affair and it would be rather humiliating to French pride to begin the role of international policeman with a long-continued fight. The Moors fight bravely and with the desperation born of Mohammedan fatalism, but General Drude's forces mowed them down with machine guns just as General Kitchener did several years ago at Khartoum. The finest courage, even when reinforced by a fanatic willingness to sacrifice one's life on the battlefield, is of small avail in a charge against a battery of machine guns, but of course the Moors did not find this out until too late.

If the terms of settlement imposed by the French are observed by the tribesmen the main obstacle to the reestablishment of order has been removed, but there still remains an unsolved problem in the presence of the pretender, Mulai Hafiz. The strength of this belligerent gentleman is unknown, but he is supposed to have a force variously estimated at from 1,500 to 10,000 men, and if he continues his campaign to depose the Sultan the population of Morocco is likely to be reduced by several thousand dusky warriors before the smoke has entirely cleared away. For those people are fighters to whom war is both business and pleasure. It is said that nearly every man in Morocco owns a gun and most of them are expert marksmen, and there is very little of the dress-parade aspect to their method of conducting war.

If the contest between the rival claimants to the throne is limited to desultory fighting it will be of little concern to the Powers, but as this is hardly likely to be the case, there is a good prospect of more work for the French troops in the near future. It begins to look as though the Powers have as disagreeable a job on their hands in maintaining order in Morocco as Uncle Sam has in trying to straighten out the various kinks of the Cuban Republic.

Indiana Methodists have refused to elect Vice President Fairbanks a delegate to the conference because he served cocktails at a dinner to the President. As a brilliant illustration of how not to advance the temperance cause this is worthy of note.

Tolstoi says the peasants who mobbed his house the other day did it in a spirit of mischief. For the sake of international amity it might be well for the Canadian government to hire Tolstoi to come over to Vancouver and preach this gospel to the Japanese mob victims.

Recent performances of the Rev. Henry Augustus Buchtel suggest that there is a lot of truth in Ingalls' assertion that "the purification of politics is an iridescent dream"—at least insofar as it can be purified by a minister of the gospel with corporation connections.

Mr. Wu is to return to this country as the Chinese ambassador. Look out for a new assortment of impertinences perpetrated under the guise of Oriental ingenuousness.

Abe Ruef thinks there is urgent need for prison reform in San Francisco. He is now confined to two rooms and deprived of his French chef.

INELEGANT DICTION.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

I am interested to inquire what was your motive in printing the inclosed clipping (September 20)?—It is surely a presumptuous person who, even though armed with a seeming (but unaccountable) approval from the Boston Transcript, dares to maintain that "may I not" is not good English; and this unknown doesn't think that the point is even open to argument, but goes on cheerfully to assume it. Does The Gazette really accept this point of view, and animated by a laudable desire to improve our "English as she is spoke," select it with malice aforethought, for expression in its columns? Or is this a part of the paper that isn't expected to be read?

In either case, it is unfortunate. If the spirit of reform is in you, why not slap out at some real inelegance, like the "this far" and "that long," and the outrageous use of like that one hears on every side, instead of padding with such insufferable nonsense as this. In one particular, the writer of the clipping is right—the point doesn't demand argument. If this be merely handy "padding," it is again unfortunate, because it could hardly fail to give The Gazette "a black eye" in the opinion of any chance reader.

While I am on the general subject of "breaks" I want to point out a dreadful one in a recent editorial. In some connection you referred to a method of ridding one's house of "flies" by squeezing them one by one, gently, between two blocks. I do not recall your honorable language, but I was inexpressibly shocked that you should have been guilty of marring this classic story by making "flies" its theme. Your fly would be too hard to catch in the first instance. Of course, it was the potato bug; and the information given came, with a couple of blocks, on a small printed slip, as answer to an advertisement of a "Sure Cure for Potato Bugs—Price $1.00." When the unhappy inquirer opened his package, he read: "Place the potato bug on the larger block of wood; place the smaller block of wood on the potato bug. Press firmly."

ATHERTON NOYES.

Colorado Springs, Sept. 27.

In reply to our questioner we beg to say that we had no "motive" whatever in printing the offending anecdote, other than to supply readers with possibly a moment's amusement. For further light on the subject, we suggest that the writer correspond with the editor of the Boston Transcript, from which it was reprinted. Our opinion, however, is that "may I not" is permissible merely because of its almost universal use by writers of authority, though it is apparent that the "not" is entirely superfluous.

We acknowledge our error in the story about the two blocks. Memory was at fault; potato bugs, not flies, were the heroes of the original version. But why would the fact that the "fly would be too hard to catch" make any difference? This is almost like explaining that the recipe for catching birds by putting salt on their tails is worthless, because of the difficulty of catching them.—Editor.

EXCRUCIATINGLY INELEGANT DICTION.

From the Boston Evening Transcript.

At a dancing party a young man said to a young woman: "May I not have the pleasure of waltzing with you?" She replied, "Certainly," and remained passive. He thought a moment and then said: "May I have the pleasure of waltzing with you?" She answered, "Certainly!" Then she arose and they embraced, as customary, and were happy.

This strange introduction of the negative is common with some of the brightest and highly educated men in the land, presidents of colleges, educators, clergymen and editors. Why is it? The saddest thought is that a few women are equally guilty. I have many clippings to prove the erroneous practice.

Dogberry might have declared such expressions exasperatingly and excruciatingly inelegant diction.

AN HOUR'S WAGES.

From the Ft. Worth Telegram.

The relative value of an hour's wages, considered by its food buying standard, in 1906, as compared with previous years has been the subject of study by the department of commerce and labor, and the published result will go a long way toward stopping the talk of increased cost of living.

The report shows that the retail price of the principal articles of food, weighed according to family consumption of the various articles, was 15.7 per cent higher in 1906 than the average price for the ten years, 1890 to 1899. Compared with the average for the same ten-year period, the purchasing power of an hour's wages in 1906, as measured by food, was 7.3 per cent greater, and of a full week's wages 2.4 per cent greater, the increase in the purchasing power of the full week's wages being less than the increase in the purchasing power of hourly wages because of the reduction in the hours of labor.

Of course there is a slight decrease in the purchasing power of a week's wages, but that is more than compensated for by the number of additional jobs that are made possible by shorter hours. The number of employes in the establishments investigated shows for the year 1906 an increase in the number of employes of 42.9 per cent over the average number for the period from 1890 to 1899.

THE PROBLEM OF THE PHILIPPINES.

From an interview with Major Rochester on his way from Manila to Washington, printed in the New York Herald.

"If the sale of the Philippines were effected it would have to be to some nation as strong as the United States. At present, owing to America's armed intervention, the islands are peaceful; at least they were when I left, on June 22. The government has done excellent work; and I believe the better class of Filipinos are grateful. Perhaps within a generation self-government might be tried.

"As an investment the Philippines are a white elephant, but from a humanitarian viewpoint, the retention of the Philippines is excellent work."

LOOSE PULPIT TALK.

From the New York Times.

An unusually blatant pulpit sensationalist is the Rev. Frederick Hopkins of Chicago, who has been denouncing in his church what he calls "the growing habit of women drinking booze in public; also gambling." Mr. Hopkins has a well-attended church in a good neighborhood, but fancies he can do good by using the language of the slums. Such an expression as "bloated boozers blowing the froth off tubs of suds" seems strange from the lips of a minister of the gospel. We doubt if St. John Chrysostom ever got down to the vulgar slang of old Byzantium in his denunciation of sin in high places. Dr. Parkhurst, battling with evil forces, used some pretty plain language, but it was always the language of a gentleman and a scholar.

THE TRUST FIXES THE PRICE.

From the Washington Star.

One of the most interesting passages between examiner and witness in the oil trust proceedings now in progress in New York occurred yesterday when Attorney Kellogg, for the government, had the following exchange with Treasurer Tilford of the trust, the former asking how the price paid by the Standard for the oil it bought for export from independent refineries, of which a very few remain in business, is fixed:

"By the daily quotations," replied the witness.

"From the produce exchange, I think."

"But don't you make the quotations yourself?"

"Yes, for our own oil."

"You make them daily and give them to the brokers?"

"Yes, sir."

"And it is on the basis of the quotations that you give out that you pay?"

"Yes, sir."

The consumer of oil will be informed by this incident that the Standard Oil company fixes the price whenever it has occasion to go to one of its feeble rivals in the refining field. Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the complete dominance of the market by the big combination.

After awhile, perhaps, the country will learn, through this inquiry, something regarding the cost of oil production and refining, and the percentage of profit to the corporation, thereby giving a line on the rate at which the consumer is being mulcted to permit the enormous dividends that the Standard has been paying for years.

Today's Horoscope

Sunday September 29, 1907.

"Quiet and peaceful signs rule all this day.
To ways serene now let your footsteps stray."

The 272nd day of the year. The moon, 22 days old, is in the third quarter and north of the equator.

A most mild day, peaceful and kind, but negative for either great good or ill. The only positive omen this day is that quarrels are threatened between the sexes. Let both sexes beware of starting disputes in jest this day. They are altogether likely to be misunderstood.

In the coming week there will be a scene of violence and deadly attack in the far east. In Washington a diplomatic complication will grow acute. In New York there is threatened serious news arriving from the direction of the sea.

Those whose birthdate this is will meet with a puzzling situation during the year. The correct solution will offend their self-love, but to overcome their faulty will mean lasting gain.

The boy born today will inherit money to a small amount from one now quite unknown to the family. He will be too fond of the opposite sex. The girl born today will need only slight guidance to become an ornament to her sex. She will have many good proposals, but will probably not marry till late in life. She should be allowed and encouraged to read a great deal in youth.

A Little Lay Sermon

From the Kansas City Journal.

Sunday is a good day to look into the future and to speculate on what sort of a world this will be when men obey the spirit of the Decalogue. There is no heed to take up any of the new-fangled creeds. So far as this world is concerned, the Decalogue is good enough and the New Testament is nonessential, for the only real difference between the new dispensation and the old dispensation is that one is old and one is new. They are both identical in spirit and they simply give the dogmatists something to argue about. For that matter, there is no essential difference between any of the codes of morals of the great teachers of the world, and the world would be saved here if it adopted the fundamentals of any of them for its guidance.

But this is a Christian country and there is no use to quarrel or argue about other religious systems. The teachings of Christ are all embodied in the spirit of the Decalogue and the "new commandment" is in reality only a composite of the ten. Take any of them at random—"Thou shalt not kill," for instance—and see what a beautiful world this would be if it was obeyed, and what a beautiful world this will be when it is obeyed—not in a pharisaical literalness, but in the great gentleness which is its essence. Suppose no man ever killed another. That would be an immense forward step, which would transform the world itself. Suppose every man loved his neighbor as himself and human life was held so sacred that every man would stay his hand against every other man, not in the dread of the brand of Cain, but because every man was his brother in the tenderest sense. It may be sophistically argued that men kill themselves, but that is human nature inverted; it is abnormal and unspeakably unnatural, against all the canons of instinct and is always the result of some tremendous upheaval of the moral nature.

Then suppose from human life the conception of sacredness was transferred to all life, animals first of all. There is no need to advocate vegetarianism or the preservation of the life of pests or dangerous beasts. That is mere sophistry. Let us confine ourselves to that which is reasonable and possible. Suppose that no man killed anything for the mere love of killing. There would then be no need for game laws to prevent so called "sportsmen" from shooting to death a mother bird as she sits over her little brood. Suppose the day comes when it will be considered cruel and unmanly to do these things, when the man whose hands are red with blood of helpless animals, slaughtered for the mere pleasure of slaying, will be beyond the pale of decent society. Suppose the day comes when no woman will be in the fashion who is decked out with the barbaric spoils of cruelty and slaughter. No danger of the world being overrun with song birds and quail and game. The rivers and lakes will not burst their bounds with fish. Those questions will solve themselves. Let men take all the life necessary to their subsistence. But suppose that all men obeyed the spirit of the great commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." The world would be melodious with songsters and in the hearts of men would be the sweetest harmony this old world ever knew. That is what one commandment would do.

And now, having speculated on what might be and what ought to be, let's go out and kill something. For we are still savage at heart and the lust of slaying, bred into us for untold thousands of years, is not to be atrophied in a day or regenerated by a little lay sermon.

SLANG

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

There is a language of the street, a dialect found in no contemporary and reputable glossary. Possibly American slang is more copious and picturesque than any other. Some years ago a voluminous slang dictionary was published in London. All such publications soon become obsolete, so changeful and ephemeral is most of the slang. Certain words now in the dictionaries were once regarded as vulgar, so that we can not be quite sure that some of the startling words and phrases of the day may not survive as expressions which our posterity can use without verbal offense. Language existed before there was a grammar and before there was a dictionary. The science of correct speech is founded on usage, and in some instances upon usage that was at one time regarded as questionable, if not absolutely bad. Time will select from the multitude of curious contemporary colloquialisms those which deserve to live in the written language.

Our faults are more apparent to others than to ourselves. An Englishman returning from a visit to the United States is regaling the readers of a London newspaper with what he is pleased, in slangy phrase, to term the "hot-air" talk of Americans. He makes the serious charge that, whereas Englishmen merely embellish their conversation with a little choice slang, Americans have constructed and freely use a copious language which is "slangular." The writer delves into the origin of the word "slang," and discovers that it is of Norwegian descent. The present word is "sleinjakjetten," meaning "to sling the jaw." No term could be more descriptive and appropriate. The unsparing critic of our linguistic aberrations translates Beaconsfield's famous allusion to Gladstone, "He is a sophisticated rhetorician, inebriated by the exuberance of his own verbosity," into this American slang vernacular, "When Gladstone talks he hands himself a lemon."

The writer observes that while the slang of the day may all be dead in ten years, it is a very real thing while it lasts, and in America it is essential that one should use a little slang if one wishes to be understood by everybody. A few sample terms are presented, "without a knowledge of which one cannot move in ordinary circles and understand conversation." The brief vocabulary given sounds very familiar to us. We characterize the hopeless spendthrift as a "high roller;" a person readily deceived as an "easy mark." A confirmed growler at men and things is a "knocker." An easy task is a mere "cinch." We "get busy" and "get on to his curves." The most cutting and crushing thing we can say of an obnoxious individual is that he is a "cheap skate." Such vulgarisms as "Wouldn't that jar you?" "Search me," "Not on your life," "Cut it out," circulate freely in the common speech and corrupt the language.

The list is only suggestive. It could be greatly extended. If slang were eliminated, the vocabulary of many persons would be exceedingly meager. Nothing indicates poverty of thought and language more certainly than the excessive use of slang. Americans may or may not be peculiarly addicted to this vulgarity. It is evident that with all our schooling the language of "the street" invades circles where purity of speech is supposed to be carefully observed and guarded.

"THE MAN LAND."

Little boy, little boy, would you go so soon,
To the land where the grown man lives?
Would you barter your toys and your fairy things
For the things that the grown man gives?
Would you leave the haven whose doors are set
With the jewels of Love's alloy
For the land of emptiness and regret?
Would you go, little boy, little boy?

It's a land far off, little boy, little boy,
And the way it is dark and steep;
And once you have passed through its doors, little boy,
You mayn't ever come back to sleep.
There is no kicking in, no good-night kiss,
No mornings of childhood joy.
It's passion and pain you give for this.
Think well, little boy, little boy!

Little boy, little boy, can't you see the ghosts
That live in the land off there;
The "broken hearts," "fair hopes," all dead;
"Lost faith" and "grim despair?"
There's a train for that land in the after years,
When old Time rushes in to destroy—
The wall that stands 'twixt the joy and the tears—

—Metropolitan.

HALLUCINATIONS FROM STARVATION

Disturbances of the mind caused by deprivation of food are described by a French physiologist, Dr. Lassiguardie: "His conclusions were to the effect that fasting promoted the development of the intellectual faculties, especially the imagination. In actual starvation, the character changed and became irritable and cruel, with loss of memory and will power, and development of hallucinations, agreeable or distressing. He has recently been studying the miners who were buried for so many days in the mine at Courriers. One miner was not released until after an interval of 35 days. He frequently imagined himself at home and talked with his wife, and imagined that he found scraps of bread, which he ate with relish. Like most of the others, he frequently imagined that he saw bright lights before him. All the miners said that they became very irritable and frequently quarreled. They all had hallucinations, generally agreeable, but nearly all retained their reason, only a few being actual dupes of their imagination."

OLD AGE.

Till the tired heart shall rest, the palpitate.
Cato learned Greek at eighty; Sophocles
Wrote his grand Oedipus, and Simonides
Bore off the prize of verse from his compeers,
When each had numbered more than fourscore years;
And Theophrastus at fourscore and ten
Had but begun his "Characters of Men."
Chaucer, at Woodstock, with the nightingales,
At sixty wrote the "Canterbury Tales;"
Goethe, at Weimar, toiling to the last,
Completed "Faust" when eighty years were past.
What, then? Shall I sit idly down and say
The night hath come; it is no longer day?
The night hath not yet come; we are not quite
Cut off from labor by the failing light;
Something remains for us to do or dare;
For age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress;
And as the evening twilight fades away,

—Henry W. Longfellow.

WOODPECKER ON SCUTCHEON.

Baron Peckover, one of the new peers, who has decided to incorporate the woodpecker in his armorial bearings, adds another house to the long list of members of the upper house who have laid ornithology under tribute in the composition of their family escutcheons.

The earl of Leicester, for instance, and Lord Rosmead have introduced the ostrich. Lord Amherst of Hackney, the heron; the earl of Spair, the stork, and Lord Tenterden and Lord Ashbourne the pelican—the last named "in her piety on a bank of reeds proper." The Cornish chough figures in the coats of arms of Lord Bolton and Lord Onslow, the latter having also an eagle, preying on a partridge, and a falcon. The swan is in those of Lord Halsbury, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, and Earl Beauchamp; Lord Brassey has the mallard, Lord Ashton the eagle, and Viscount Combermere the falcon.

MAGAZINE NOTES

The current issue of Harper's Weekly opens with an article of unusual interest by this country's naval authority, Captain A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., entitled, "The Night Watches at Sea." The remarkable task which has been allotted to the golden boe, that of changing the agricultural status of a nation, is described by T. Everett Harry. A compelling answer to an article entitled "Extravagance and National Prosperity," is also presented. An exciting fox hunt is described by Belmont Purdy, and there are other articles of timely interest with photographs, and the usual pages of "Comment" and editorials. The fictional feature is supplied by an engrossing installment of Hamlin Garland's serial, "Money Magic," which is approaching its climax.

In variety and interest the October McClure's is remarkable. After a break of two months Ellen Terry resumes her delightful memoirs with an account of her domestic life, called "My Children and I," which has much amusing gossip of Rossetti, Irving, Bernhardt, Charles Reade and other famous people.

Professor Munsterberg has an article on "The Third Degree," which points to the legal and medical possibilities of experimental psychology and is full of interest and suggestion for the average lay reader.

Cleveland Moffett's "Winning the First International Balloon Race," an absorbing account of adventurous sport in the upper air, tells how the first international race was won by a young American with "a second-hand balloon."

The latest installment of Mrs. Eddy's life by Miss Milmine throws more light on the methods which made for the success of this remarkable woman than anything that has gone before. An illuminating characterization by the only person associated with her who "ever studied her with such an unprejudiced and tempered mind," completes this chapter.

A FIRM ANSWER.

From September Lippincott's.

The Rev. Mr. Freuder of Philadelphia tells this story of himself.

Some time ago he was invited to dine at the house of a friend, whose wife went into her kitchen to give some final orders. Incidentally, she added to the servant, "We are to have a Jewish rabbi for dinner today."

For a moment the maid surveyed her mistress in grim silence. Then she spoke with decision. "All I have to say is," she announced, "if you have a Jewish rabbi for dinner you'll cook it yourself."

The Heavens in October

Saturn With Its Rings and Moons Is Coming Into Favorable Position.

Interesting Facts About the Milky Way, Etc.

By Professor Doolittle, Astronomer of the University of Pennsylvania.

THE principal change in the evening sky is the appearance of the bright winter constellation Taurus which, with beautiful Pleiades is now high up in the east. The Scorpion, the Balance, the Virgo have all disappeared, while the great faint Ophinchus, or Serpent-holder, is already half sunk in the west. Overhead there shines out the beautiful Northern Cross, which, with Cassiopeia in the north and Formalhaut and the Eagle in the south, makes the autumn sky so much brighter than that of midsummer.

The wonderful Milky Way still passes directly overhead, but its slow westward turning has now become very evident. In August it arched the heavens from north to south; now it extends from the northeast to the southwest; by December it will stretch due east and west, and not until the end of February will it cease to pass directly through the zenith. Then the winter branch will be visible to us, after which it will rapidly sink toward the west and disappear.

The Planets.

The planet Mars, which is moving rapidly eastward out of the constellation Sagittarius into Capricornus, may still be seen in the southwest, but it is now in unfavorable position for observation. The beautiful Saturn, however, with its rings and retinue of moons is high up in the east, and every evening is coming into more favorable position. And low down in the west, just after sunset, a brilliant planet will be detected creeping out from behind the sun so rapidly that, by the end of the month it will be very conspicuous and soon after will exceed Mars in brilliancy. This is the planet Venus, which all through the winter will remain the beautiful evening star.

The observer may also detect the little planet Mercury, which will reach its greatest distance east of the sun on the 23rd of the month, and may possibly be seen shining in the sunset glow far toward the southwest. This planet is so low down in the sky, however, that it will only be found with difficulty.

On October 15th, at forty-seven minutes past four P. M., the moon will pass over the star at A, Fig. 1; on October 23rd at 6:24 A. M. it will pass over the star at B. The first star will remain behind the moon one hour and three minutes, and the second one one hour and five minutes, as seen from Washington.

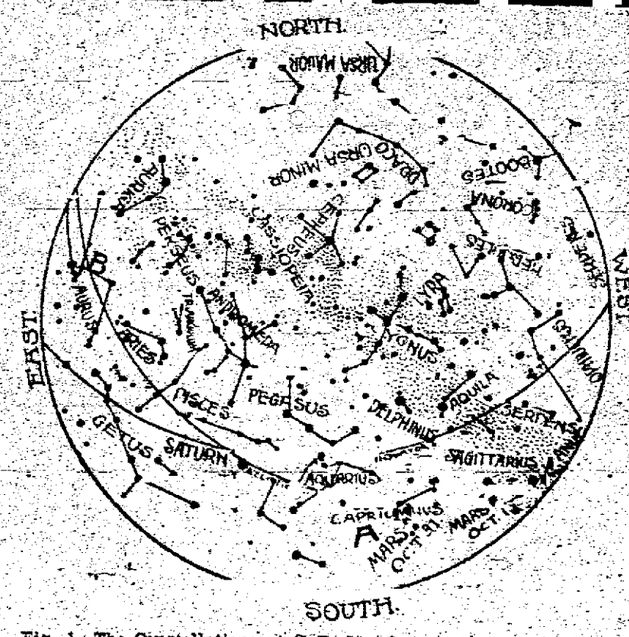

Fig. 1—The Constellations at 9 P. M., October 1.

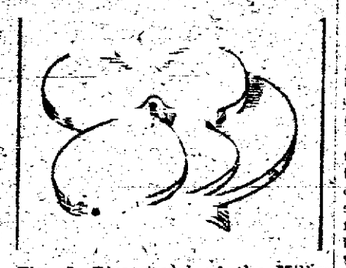

Fig. 2—Disc model of the Milky Way.

The August Comet.

The observer who looked at the sky just before sunrise during the month of August doubtless saw the bright little comet which was then visible. These visitors from the depths of space have been very rare of late years. No one can tell when our sun will pass one of these bodies and draw it toward itself with ever-increasing velocity until the comet finally swings around the sun and pursues its journey out into space again, where possibly ages hence it may be disturbed in just the same way by another star. The August comet was a very pretty one, with a bright nucleus and a short tail. It was easily visible without a telescope. On August 1st it was near the bright star Aldebaran at A, Fig. 6; by September 1st it had moved entirely across the Twins into Cancer. It was nearest the earth on August 3rd, when it was but 78 millions of miles away, but it was brightest on August 23rd because, though it was then 99 million miles from us, it had drawn so near the sun that the disturbance produced in it by that great body had greatly increased its intrinsic brightness.

Fig. 3—Photograph of a part of the Milky Way.

The Universe of Stars.

No one can study the wonderful fuse of the sky, shown in Figs. 1 and 3, without wondering what the nature of the universe is. Surrounding us in every direction is this vast aggregation of suns extending into the infinite regions of space to distance utterly inconceivable to us. This whole universe of each dust particle is a sun and around one of the smaller suns we know that stars is as a great cloud of dust, but there are many minute worlds revolving on one of which it is our destiny to dwell. What is the shape and the true size of this great cloud, if indeed it does not extend on forever? Is there nothing beyond it but empty space, or are there other universes than our own?

The first attempt to find the form of our universe was made by Herschel more than a century ago. Supposing that the fainter stars appear faint because they are farther from us than the brighter ones, and that the stars on the whole are evenly distributed through the cloud he thought it only necessary to point his telescope in different directions and to count the number of stars which he saw. In this way he sounded the depth of the cloud in very many directions; if in one pointing twice as many stars were found as in another, the first sounding was supposed to be twice as deep as the second. The model formed from all the pointing is the disc-shaped body shown in Fig. 2 with various laminations corresponding to the branching of the Milky Way, and with a few holes directly through it which correspond to the coal-holes or vacant places in the sky.

But a mere glance at any photograph of the Milky Way, such as is shown in Fig. 3, will show that the stars are not evenly distributed, but are massed together in some places and comparatively few in others. Many of the very faint stars, too, are certainly not farther away than the brighter ones; they are faint either because they are new stars not yet much condensed or because they are actually smaller than others or because they are very old and beginning to die out.

If we could directly measure the distance to some thousands of stars the task of finding the shape and size of our star cloud would be an easy one. But there is only one way known of measuring the distance of a star, and that is by observing its apparent change in direction from us as the earth carries us along its great path in its yearly journey around the sun. And nearly all of the stars are so infinitely far away that even when our position is thus altered by 185 millions of miles they are not apparently displaced in the slightest degree.

Fig. 4 Spiral model of the Milky Way.

Fig. 5—A possible form of the Milky Way Spiral.

But beside our own motion around the sun, the sun itself is ceaselessly rushing through the star cloud carrying the earth and all of the other planets with it. The effect of this motion is to cause a displacement of all of the stars, and notwithstanding that the stars themselves are also moving in all directions, on the whole those stars which are nearest to us will appear to be displaced the most, just as to a passenger on a swiftly moving railway train the nearer objects appear to rush past with far greater velocity than those which are far away. If, therefore, two series of stars are so chosen that the drift of each star of the series over the sky is twice as great as that of the second, we can say that on the whole all the stars of the second series are twice as far away as those of the first, though we can tell nothing of the comparative distances of any two particular stars. As the centuries go by in which we are carried even further on our journey through the star cloud, the accuracy of this method will be very much increased.

From such careful studies of star drift it is inferred that the great majority of stars which we see are arranged in a long spiral cluster which appears to us as the Milky Way. When the telescope stars of this cluster are mapped, it is seen that its borders are not sharply marked as they would be if we were viewing it from the outside, but that the stars diminish in number gradually until the bright band fades into the ordinary star-lit sky. From this it is concluded that we are in the cluster itself; that our sun is merely one of the stars of the Milky Way clusters.

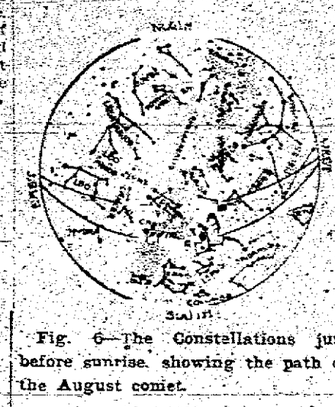

Fig. 6—The Constellations just before sunrise, showing the path of the August comet.

Fig. 4 shows a form originally assigned to the Milky Way cluster, but from more recent researches it appears that the spiral is more complicated, perhaps somewhat of the shape shown in Fig. 5. The distance across the cluster is still very uncertain. Perhaps the most reliable estimate is that which places it at about 4,000 light years; that is, light occupies 4,000 years in passing from one end of the cluster to the other.

Scattered among the bright stars there are innumerable fainter ones which appear faint because they actually are so and not because they are farther away than the others. Some of them, like the red stars, are faint because they have reached a point in their development in which the light from their bright interior is obscured by heavy clouds. Some are too little condensed as yet to emit much light; they are too young, and all of the stars are slowly contracting and approaching a solid condition. We cannot doubt that there are very many which have already become cold and which must remain forever invisible to us. And since in a definite though very long time even the largest sun will thus die out under the action of natural forces, it seems that had these been acting forever every star would have long since become cold. We are, therefore, led to conclude that our universe in its present form cannot have existed forever, but that it had a beginning no less surely than it shall have an end.

What the Press Agents Say

THE NEW COMIC OPERA, "THE ALASKAN."

The new comic opera hit of the season will be seen when "The Alaskan," which is to be brought here direct from its successful summer engagement at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, comes to town. The production will be offered at the Opera house Tuesday evening.

New York pronounced the opera one of the biggest spectacles and musical novelties of recent years. It is the first opera to attempt to convey something of the lighter sides of life in a gold mining country. Nome, Alaska, and near Nome, are the scenes shown. Musically, the piece scored a big popular hit during its metropolitan performances. The people of its story are all indigenous to gold mine prospecting and mining camps. Ensemble introductions include Esquimo girls, miner girls, camp belles, and, of course, miners themselves, as well as the visitors and hangers-on peculiar to gold countries. "Mt. Totem Pole," one of the costume ensemble numbers, was voted the biggest new thing in the way of a song that the comic opera of New York has shown in a dozen years. "Arlos," another song hit of the piece, is said to be almost equally attractive. The performances here will be given with the New York cast and production intact.

Harry Girard, who wrote the score of the opera, appears in its title role. Mr. Girard will be recalled as the leading singer of Lulu Glaser's company when she presented "Dolly Varden." Joseph Herbert, the author of the book and the lyrics, is a well-known western writer. "The Chinook" and other plays of western life came from his pen. John Cort, the manager of a number of important big productions, including Maude Fealy, Sarah Truax, Max Figman and "The Yankee Regent," is the producing sponsor of the new piece. Max Figman staged it. Agnes Cain Brown, Harold Vizard, Edward Martindell, Teddy Webb, Amy Leicester, Annie Adair, William Fables, and other well-known artists are included in the company.

In the first act the sluiceway and camp of the miners, with a beautiful picture of the distant mountains, is shown. And it is here that the various characters are assembled. "The Alaskan" differs from the commonplace run of comic operas in that it is not set among some Oriental isle of the southern seas. The scenes are boldly constructed from the material of the Alaskan gold field. The costuming is in keeping with the scenes and of a fine order of beauty and richness. "Furs may be a little harder on the chorus, but to the audience they are a great relief from the flimsy laces and gaudy colors of the comic opera choruses of recent years," writes a Rochester (N. Y.) critic, in reviewing the production in that city, where it made its first stand on leaving the metropolis the first of last week.

It is, indeed, "good news" that at last a new locale has been found for a comic opera, and it should prove all the more welcome to American theater-goers, for it is in Alaska, Uncle Sam's gold country. "The Alaskan" is reported to have a real plot and a real story, simply developed and told with both pathetic and humorous sides.

An unusual interest of the chorus girl feature is the appearance in the auxiliary feminine numbers of about thirty singing and show girls brought from Seattle and other northwestern cities close to the playground of the opera itself.

"THE ROYAL CHEF" COMING.

Hronowski's [illegible] good things and of "The Royal Chef" [illegible] play-goers of [illegible] the [illegible] travel of "Heinrich Leinhauser" being one of the most finished character creations introduced to the stage in many a day. Mr. McCarthy is described as an inventive comedian, keen and energetic, and his complete mastery of the rather difficult and lamentable mixture of broken English and German dialect is an added equally [illegible] the fact that he has a theater-goers of Colorado Springs are in for a theatrical treat on Monday, Oct. 7, at the Opera house; one not only out of the ordinary, but which will doubtless prove a real loss to miss seeing and hearing. The music by Ben M. Jerome, it is asserted, is particularly charming, while the story and lyrics of Charles S. Taylor and George Stoddard are vivacious and brilliant, overflowing with rich, intelligent humor and witticrie untouched ideas, that, it is claimed, never for a single moment veer to monotony, either in color or style. The presenting company is declared delightful, being composed of fine singers, great dancers and comedians capable of amusing and exhilarating effort. It is claimed that besides the many entertaining features of the "Chef" its entire tone is elevating, which is much to be desired after the hideous doggerel and imbecility of a lot of so-called musical comedy triumphs, which have gone before. William J. McCarthy, easily the most interesting of a fine company, will appear in his original character of the "Royal Chef," his porfine singing voice and renders his numbers in a manner exhibiting cultivation. The feminine portion is composed of attractive young singers and dancers, a fact taken advantage of by capable and inventive stage management, to form handsome young creatures into bouquets, garlands and tableaux galore. The original "Broilers," consisting of sixteen young girls of exact size and weight, each one a dancing expert, is a component part of the "Chef" and will make their appearance in this city with 14 of the original members. Our playgoers who enjoy smart, snappy wit, sweet, vacuous melodies and catchy song hits must not overlook the forthcoming engagement of the "Royal Chef."

CYRIL SCOTT IN "THE PRINCE CHAP."

At last we are to get Cyril Scott in "The Prince Chap," a play that has delighted New York for the past two seasons, and has made one of the most sterling hits in London recorded in many years. It will be presented at the Opera house soon. If one enjoys a hearty laugh, if one is interested in a play that has for its theme humanity that is really human, love that is pure, in fact, a play that has won applause perforce of its naturalness, it is admitted by the big majority that Mr. Peple's comedy-drama is bound to please.

An outline of the story can only barely convey the mingled dramatic and comic qualities of this piece. It concerns William Peyton, a young American sculptor, a big-hearted fellow, "a sort of prince chap," as he describes himself to the little girl who has been left to his care by a model whom he has befriended, as he tells her of "Princess Alice," who is far away in America. Three years later, when the little girl is eight years old, the old sweetheart, "Princess Alice," arrives in London, with a mind poisoned against Peyton by stories that the ward is in truth the child of the sculptor. She demands, as a proof of his innocence, that Peyton send little Claudia away. This he refuses to do, and Alice Travers marries another man. Ten years later, as a widow, the woman reappears and attempts to renew the old feeling between them. But in the meantime Claudia, the model's daughter, has become 18, and it is revealed to Peyton and to the girl who has grown up with "daddy" that the "Princess Alice" has gone out of their dream.

It is the treatment of this simple theme that fascinates one, it is said. The London Times said: "It is one of the best plays that America has sent over," indorsing the appreciation that New York play-goers showed during the 209 performances of "The Prince Chap" in Broadway. The best of the original cast will support Mr. Scott in the presentation of "The Prince Chap" here, including Helen Pullman, Charles B. Wells, George Schaeffer, Cecil De Mille, Duane Wagar, Beryl Pullman, Ida Stanhope, Kathryn Rives, Mary Keogh, Arnold Raye, Albert Powers, F. B. Randall, Gertrude Barrett and others.

SOUSA HEADING THIS WAY.

After 16 years of almost uninterrupted touring and concertizing with his band, John Philip Sousa, on November 1 last, threw aside all conductor and band cares and gave himself up to the wholesome pastimes of shooting, hunting, tennis playing and horse-backing. In other words, he has been taking a "good rest."

Meantime, requests for his appearance from a public that has come to idolize him, have been so frequent and urgent, that a fall tour has been arranged, beginning on August 10, with the Sousa band's seventh annual engagement at Willow Grove park, near Philadelphia, Pa. Two weeks of concerts then follow at the Western Pennsylvania exposition, Pittsburg, Pa. Likewise a week at the Corn Palace, Mitchell, South Dakota. From Mitchell the itinerary will lead westward toward Portland, Ore., southward to San Francisco and Los Angeles, and back again to the east via the cities of Salt Lake City, Denver, Topeka, Omaha, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Milwaukee, Chicago, etc.

It need hardly be said that Mr. Sousa will be "fit as a king" for this transcontinental tour, and will give his audience a full taste of the stirring, healthy, rhythmic music that has given the Sousa name so large a place in music's realm. Many of the cities to be visited have not heard the Sousa band in years, a good reason why their Sousa appetite will be keenly whetted. Jim Barnes, formerly treasurer of our Opera house, is now general manager for Sousa's band.

AMUSEMENT FOR ALL AT THE EMPIRE

With the opening of the fall theatrical season, Manager Robert Ellis is securing the cream of the vaudeville circuit for the local house. Every act is picked with the idea of getting the best obtainable. Among those on the bill this week are Rivers and Rochester, Australian singers and dancers. This act is one of the best in the country and will be seen in Colorado Springs for the first time Monday. Manager Ellis is fortunate in securing Belle Gordon, the champion lady bag puncher of the world. Miss Gordon has a national reputation as a bag puncher and has been awarded several medals by the Police Gazette, as a reward for her ability in this line. Not least among the star acts is Molly Thompson, musical monologist. Miss Thompson is a favorite wherever she appears as she presents an act that is clever and entertaining from start to finish. New motion pictures an an illustrated song by Manager Ellis will be given as usual.

WENDLING THURSDAY NIGHT

George E. Wendling is a native of Illinois; after five years of university life was a young attorney with a large practice; was a brilliant jury lawyer, and one of the most distinguished members of the convention which framed the present constitution of Illinois; received an invitation from one of the leading bureaus to lecture, accepted the invitation, intending to remain on the platform only a few weeks. His lectures achieved instant and wide popularity. He has since given a portion of each year to the work, has withdrawn from the practice of law, devotes all of his time to literary labors, lives in Washington, D. C., during the winter, and in the summer at his country place at Charleston, W. Va.

Mr. Wendling filled 130 engagements during his first five months on the platform, and in the seven following years he filled over 1,300 engagements—a record not surpassed since the best days of Beecher, Gough and Phillips. He is now in the thirtieth year of his lyceum career, doing stronger work than ever, and with a wider demand for his services.

The Event of Your Colorado Visit That You Will Remember the Longest

Your Trip over "Temple Drive" and into the wonderful

CAVE OF THE WINDS — TEMPLE DRIVE, Manitou

Temple Drive is a carriage road, beginning near the Cliff House, Manitou, and traverses beautiful "Williams' Canon" for nearly two miles. The first mile is in the bottom of the canon in the shadow of walls from 200 to 500 feet high, but the second mile climbs the canon's west wall at an easy and regular grade, although carved and blasted from the rugged and prodigious height. It is protected its whole length by heavy timber railing and stone walls.

This short trip discloses the cream of Williams' Canon scenery. The Temple of Isis, Cathedral of St. Peter, The Narrows, Rubicon Point, and St. Peter's Gate placed in the Cathedral Dome, 450 feet above the roadway, all dressed with the most interesting individual views in the Rocky Mountains.

The road was constructed by the management of the Cave of the Winds, to make easily accessible that elfin ramble in the heart of a Mountain of Limestone, but has been dedicated to the public for their free use and pleasure.

Comfortably seated upon the broad veranda of the new office-building, or resting against the solid railing, and viewing the canon above and around, the bottom of which is over 500 feet, nearly perpendicularly below, sensations of security, awe, and enthusiasm, follow each other rapidly.

Strikingly peculiar are The Narrows, the entrance to and exit from the Majestic Canon, which extends five miles further into the mountains. The cliffs gradually converge, until the traveler despairs of further progress. Here The Narrows, its tortuous course being only an aisle eight feet wide, parts the walls, and carriages and persons having passed those mighty jaws appear to have come from the smooth face of the rock itself.

High above Manitou, through a rift in the foot hills, the vision sweeps for a hundred miles the great plains, and as the gaze rests at their furthermost limit we feel a deepening reverence for the brave men who years ago laid the foundation for our pleasures of today, and involuntarily our lips render homage to the hardy pioneers and pathfinders of Auld Lang Syne.

The days of old, the days of gold,
The days of '49.

For years this roadway had been deemed impracticable, and its achievement appeals instantly to the admiration of the proverbial Western pluck that has mastered the "impossible situation."

Accept our most cheerful invitation to enjoy fully the charms of Temple Drive, and do not fail to alight, and, from the veranda, delight the senses with those most vivid and realistic impressions of the beauty and grandeur of Rocky Mountain scenery.

S.S.S. PURIFIES THE BLOOD

Bad blood is responsible for most of the ailments of mankind. When from any cause this vital fluid becomes infected with impurities, humors or poisons, disease in some form is sure to follow. Eczema, Acne, Tetter, Rash, Pimples, etc., while they show on the skin, have an underlying cause which is far deeper—an impure, humor-infected blood supply, and until this is corrected, and the blood purified, the distressing itching and burning symptoms will remain. Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Scrofula, Blood Poison and all other blood disorders, are the result of a vitiated, polluted circulation, and will continue to grow worse unless the poison is removed from the blood. In all blood and skin diseases S. S. S. has proved itself a perfect remedy. It goes down into the circulation and removes all waste matter, humors or poisons, and makes the blood pure and health-sustaining. Nothing reaches inherited taints and old chronic troubles like S. S. S.; it cures because it purifies the blood and restores lost properties to the impoverished circulation. Not only is S. S. S. a blood purifier of the highest order, but a tonic and appetizer without an equal. Book on the blood and any medical advice desired sent free to all who write.

The Bubonic Plague

The Most Widespread, the Most Terrible and the Most Fatal Pestilence Known to Man. A Malady Not Confined to the Tropics, as is Generally Supposed. Modern Efforts to Combat It. The Famous Black Death of Europe Was No Doubt Bubonic.

Copyright, 1907, by J. W. Muller.

This and the other articles to appear in this series have been prepared by specialists and medical men of wide reputation. Each contributor stands high in his field. Professional ethics prohibit them from attaching their names, but every statement is made with the highest authority.

THE bubonic plague, which recently reappeared upon the Pacific coast, is an acute infectious disease caused by a minute organism called the bacillus pestis. The disease itself has been known since the time of the patriarchs, and one authority estimates that it has killed fully 2,000,000,000 human beings in the past 2,000 years, but it was not until 1894 that the organism was discovered.

The discovery was made simultaneously and independently by two noted pathologists, Kitasato and Yersin, and since then the latter has perfected an immunizing antitoxin. There is also a preventative vaccine of another sort. Both the antitoxin and the vaccine have been used extensively and with good results, but the bubonic remains a violent and virulent plague. It is epidemic in India year in and year out, and along the China coast, in central Asia and in the East Indies and South Sea islands it is ever present.

Bubonic is one of the most deadly maladies known. All authorities agree that the mortality is usually more than 50 per cent, and in exceptional cases it sometimes closely approaches 100 per cent. During the Hongkong epidemic in 1894 nine-tenths of the Chinamen attacked did not recover. In India, despite the valiant efforts of the British doctors, the death rate is commonly from 60 to 80 per cent.

Symptoms of the Disease.

The symptoms which gives the bubonic plague its name is the appearance of huge boils or bubocs upon the neck and groin and under the arms of the patient. The period of inoculation is from three to seven days, and after that, for a day or two the patient has chills, fever, headaches, nauseau and all the other customary signs of an acute infection.

At the end of this time the buboes begin to appear and the patient grows very ill. If he is able to walk at all he staggers like a drunken man. His temperature rises to 104 degrees or higher and his pulse beats rapidly and strongly. His tongue is dry and yellow, and he can scarcely speak.

After the third day the temperature usually falls a bit, but it is only temporarily. When it rises again it remains at 104 or 105 degrees for a week. During this period collapse and death often put an end to the patient's sufferings. If he is fated to escape, his temperature gradually falls.

But even under the most favorable conditions the exhaustion following an attack is severe, and the patient may die suddenly of heart failure. Again peritonitis may set in, or jaundice, or pneumonia, or the buboes may suppurate and form huge running sores. In any case, the disease is painful and dangerous, the death rate is high, and recovery is uncertain and slow.

There are a great many other forms of bubonic plague, but the one described is by far the most common. Nearly always there is some troublesome complication. When this takes the form of lung infection the disease is sometimes called pneumonic plague.

The investigations of the Japanese pathologists and of the British and Americans in India, the Philippines and along the China coast have proved beyond a doubt that bubonic is most commonly transmitted from man to man by rats. The large rats which infest all ships and seaports are very susceptible to the disease, and when it breaks out among them they die by the hundred thousand.

Even when human beings do not come into actual contact with these dead rodents, they may be inoculated through the medium of fleas, lice and other insects. A special rat flea called the pulex cheopis carries the germs from rat to man—upon its feet or in its jaws.

Bubonic plague is an extraordinarily infectious malady. The germs may enter the body through the lungs—in dust, for instance—or by way of the mouth—as in food that has been contaminated by fleas or flies. Some of the Japanese experts are of the opinion that the organisms may even enter through the skin. The most minute scratch or cut is sufficient to give them a lodgment, and in a few hours they swarm in the blood.

In the tropics white men usually escape the bubonic for the simple reason that they live cleanly and take proper precautions against infection. In the native quarters of tropical towns, where rats are numerous and insects are legion, it often happens that two-thirds of the population is infected. Indeed, in India it has been found necessary at times to burn down whole towns before an epidemic could be got in hand.

Drugs of No Avail.

Drugs are absolutely useless in the treatment of bubonic. When once a case develops, in fact, little can be done to halt or modify its course. But preventative measures are very often remarkably effective. They may be divided into two classes: those which contemplate the isolation of patients and the destruction of rats and insects, and those which involve the employment of the serum and vaccine mentioned above.

A rigid quarantine is necessary to keep patients from infecting other persons. All rats and other small animals must be killed, and efforts must be made to destroy all roaches, fleas, flies and bedbugs. The bodies of the dead must be burned, all sick rooms must be disinfected with formaldehyde, and chloride of lime must be used lavishly in all drains.

The burial of any man dead of the plague is a crime against the human race. The body is alive with the organisms, and these will remain alive for an almost incredible period. Months afterward they may reach the surface of the ground and begin extensive journeylings—in the bodies of rats or upon the legs of insects. The result will be inevitably be a fresh outbreak of the malady.

Even convalescents are extremely dangerous to the community. The Japanese investigators have found that a patient's blood swarms with plague germs for nearly a month after he has apparently recovered. It is obvious that he may thus unwittingly infect all who come into contact with him.

Indeed, bubonic is such a virulent disease that, in the past, the military power has often had to come to the aid of those fighting it. Very often martial law alone can insure the proper destruction of corpses and the proper isolation of patients.

How Serum Is Made.

Yersin's anti-bubonic serum is made by inoculating healthy horses with virulent plague bacilli. The blood of the horses begins at once to combat these bacilli—by producing substances which paralyze them and neutralize their toxins, or poisons. By and by this blood is so full of these substances that plague bacilli cannot live in it.

Then some of it is drawn from the horses' veins and injected into the veins of human patients. It retains its power of combating bacilli, and so confers immunity to the plague. Unluckily this immunity is not permanent. Experiment tends to prove, in fact, that it lasts no longer than two weeks. Therefore a man exposed to bubonic infection should be immunized anew every fortnight.

Haffkine's prophylactic plague fluid consists of a dead culture of dead bacilli. These bacilli, of course, are inert themselves, but their toxins, or poisons, are unaffected by the means employed to kill them. When a dose of the fluid is injected into a man's veins these toxins stimulate his blood to produce anti-toxins, and the blood, after having produced enough to overcome the toxins, keeps on. The resulting surplus of anti-toxins serves to make harmless any bacilli that may wander in subsequently, and thus the man is rendered immune to the bubonic.

Use of the Fluid.

There is a difference of opinion as to how long this immunity lasts. In many cases, however, it undoubtedly lasts a good while—perhaps several months. In consequence Haffkine's fluid is extensively used in the tropics to immunize white men who are exposed to plague infection. Lord Curzon, submitted to inoculation, and thus set an example which bore good fruit.

It is probable that if all of the inhabitants of India, for instance, were thus immunized, the bubonic would soon die out. But the ignorant natives, like ignorant people everywhere else, are opposed to inoculation, and it is difficult to make them submit to it. In addition, the fluid is rather expensive, and it would take a hundred thousand doctors to inoculate all the people of India within a reasonable time.

Besides that, there are very serious practical difficulties. For one thing, during a few days following inoculation the Haffkine fluid makes the person inoculated, more, instead of less susceptible to infection. For another thing, if it is employed after a person has become infected, but before the symptoms of the disease have developed, it is apt to produce a serious and perhaps fatal attack. Only with proper precautions is its use advisable.

Despite the popular idea, bubonic plague is not a malady peculiar to the tropics. During the middle ages it frequently ravaged Europe, and in recent years it has appeared in New York city, Bremen, Hamburg, Glasgow, San Francisco and other seaports of the temperate zone. It is most common in tropical countries because the people live with least regard for hygienic safety.

The Epidemic in India.

The present epidemic in India began in 1896. It spread rapidly in the United Provinces, Bengal and the Punjab, and in 1900 the number of deaths reached more than a million. From January to August, 1902, the mortality was 600,000. Since then it has been increasing rather than falling. In 1904, 934,610 deaths were reported, and in 1905 more than a million.

Rufus of Ephesus, a physician who lived long before the beginning of the Christian era, was the first skilled observer to describe the bubonic plague. A fragment of his work on the subject, still preserved, says that the malady in his time, was emphatic in Libya, Egypt and Syria. It raged in Africa for centuries, but so far as is known it did not reach Europe until the sixth century of our era.

When it once got a foothold it spread rapidly, and soon it began to have victims in all the cities of the continent. In the year 543 it killed 10,000 persons in Constantinople, and in 590 it raged in Rome. In the fourteenth century, under the name of the Black Death, it devastated the whole of Europe. There is some doubt as to whether all of the epidemics ascribed to the mysterious Black Death were really due to bubonic, but it is plain that most of them were.

Great Plague of London.

In 1681 came the great plague of London, when 70,000 persons out of a population of less than half a million died. According to some authorities the disease was introduced, by way of Holland, from the Levant. No doubt the active agents were ships' rats.

In modern times there have been many great epidemics. In 1812 Constantinople lost 150,000 of her people, and ten years later there was another outbreak with a mortality of 110,000. The next year the bubonic appeared in the Balkans, and the ensuing epidemic continued for no less than 27 years. Meanwhile, the infection spread to Greece and Italy.

In 1877 a few cases were observed in Astrakhan, Russia. Within a few weeks there were thousands of cases, and whole provinces were well nigh depopulated. This epidemic is thought to have been caused by fleas and other insects introduced from Persia. The number of deaths is not known, but it is thought that it reached 2,000,000.

In China the bubonic has been prevalent for at least 1,000 years. In the fourteenth century there was a terrible epidemic and millions died. It spread to all the islands of the China seas, and when the Japanese annexed Formosa they found many cases there.

NINE DAYS WITHOUT SLEEP FATAL.

A Chinese merchant of Pekin who was convicted of murder was sentenced to death by being deprived of sleep. Four warders kept watch over him to keep him awake and on the tenth day he died.

MRS. JAMES D. WHITMORE,
President of the Colorado Federation of Women's Clubs.

All contributions intended for the social department of the Sunday Gazette should reach the editor, Mrs. Ella Celeste Adams, 226 Cheyenne avenue, telephone Main 1322, or Gazette editorial rooms, telephone Main 215, not later than Friday noon.

A BRILLIANT season is foreshadowed in the way of entertainments and concerts in this city chiefly owing to the efforts of the Colorado Springs Musical club and the Young Men's Christian association. Announcement has already been made of the Star course of the Y. M. C. A. and within a day or two, the Musical club has learned definitely the personnel of its series of artist concerts.

The disappointment was great when the committee found that it would be impossible to secure the great Gadski, as she did not arrive from Europe in time to fulfill a Colorado engagement. But, having been able to make a contract for Bessie Abott, one of the finest and most conspicuous of the younger opera singers of the Metropolitan Opera company they have no fears in regard to pleasing their patrons.

Bessie Abott will appear in the Opera house October 23. In her company are Sig. Ed. Castellano, the eminent tenor, Mile Ada Sassoli, solo harpist, also, a quintet of strings, flute and piano.

Josef Hoffman, the eminent pianist, who has already won a favorite's rank with Colorado Springs musical people will give a concert here on the evening of February 5. The third attraction will be the violinist, Kreisler on the evening of February 26.

The musical club has ventured to contract with more expensive musicians than ever before in its history, but no doubts are entertained as Colorado Springs always likes the best in everything and is willing to show it by supporting liberally.

The matinee musicale and buffet luncheon of Mrs. Frederick Augustus Faust, 118 East Dale street was one of the most enjoyable and distinguished social events ever given in this city. Thursday, at 11 o'clock, Mrs. Faust welcomed here guests to the number of about 75 and then conducted the program which was replete with musical gems seldom, if ever, heard in a private home. Afterwards, those present were regaled with a delicious several course luncheon.

The numbers rendered were:

Carneval for two pianos.....Ludwig Schytte
Mrs. Faust, Mrs. Hemus.
"La Mort de Jeanne d'Arc".....Bemberg
Mrs. Tucker.
Suite for two violins and piano.....
.....Moszkowski
Miss Trott, Mrs. Briscoe, Mrs. Faust.
(a) "In der Heimath".....Hildach
(b) "En Chamin".....Augusta Holmes
"I Drink the Fragrance of the Rose".....Clough Leighter
Mrs. Tucker.

Responding to an insistent encore after her first song, Mrs. Tucker rendered the new composition of Mr. Frederick Ayers Johnson of this city, "Nanette" much to the delight of her auditors.

The program book of the Colorado Springs Musical club, just issued, is indicative of an even more interesting and profitable season than any hitherto known in the history of an organization of which our citizens are justly proud.

Applications for membership may be made to Miss Rouse, 2 West Costilla street. All annual fees are due at the opening of the club year (in the fall) or upon admission to the club.

Members have the privilege of bringing to the meetings in Perkins hall guests who are not residents in the city. These guests must present the visiting card of the friend by whom they are invited. Those taking part in the program may bring four guests.

The officers and advisory committee of the club include: President, Mrs. J. S. Tucker; first vice president, Mrs. Robert Briscoe; second vice president, Mrs. E. C. Shaver; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. D. Hawkins; recording secretary, Miss Rouse; treasurer, Miss Dickerman, 814 North Tejon street.

Around Festive Board

The "at home" of Mrs. John Murray Ward on Tuesday afternoon from 3 until 5 o'clock in the handsome parlors of the Acacia hotel was the signal for a fashionable rally of the friends of the genial hostess to the number of more than 100. Late garden flowers, principally dahlias in the rich red shades were selected for decorative purposes.

The refreshments were dispensed from a large table spread in the quaint "Dutch room" red, white and green predominating. Strands of smilax entwined the electroliers and the centerpiece was of dahlias in their own foliage.

Receiving with Mrs. Ward were Mrs. Frank G. Peck, Mrs. Morris V. Andre and Mrs. J. H. Avery. The other ladies assisting were Mrs. Albert J. Bendle, Mrs. Edmund Allen, Mrs. Edward Paul Dillon, Mrs. Ernest D. Marr, Mrs. Frank R. Marsh, Mrs. James W. Atkinson, Mrs. Charles T. Wilder, Mrs. Clarence E. Titus, Mrs. Lillian Yates.

* *

Mrs. Franklin E. Brooks gave an informal luncheon Friday at her home on North Nevada avenue.

Mrs. W. Kennon Jewett entertained several guests at a late afternoon tea on Tuesday at her home on North Cascade avenue.

* *

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Tutt entertained at dinner Tuesday evening before the play. Among their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Egbert Smit and Mrs. D. G. C. MacNeill.

* *

One of the notable "early breakfast" parties that have distinguished the social week was that given yesterday by the Misses King and Kirkland of this city, in honor of their friend, Mrs. Snyder, of Bound Brook, N. J., after which a trip was made to Pike's Peak. The Misses King and Kirkland plan other entertaining functions for their charming guest who is well known in the most exclusive circles of New Jersey.

* *

* *

Mrs. E. F. Smith of East Dale street gave a beautifully arranged luncheon last Saturday in compliment to Mrs. J. T. Milliken of St. Louis, Mo.

* *

Mrs. Charles L. Tutt gave an elaborately appointed luncheon yesterday noon at the Cheyenne Mountain Country club.

* *

In honor of her guest, Miss Ruth Dickinson, of Denver, Miss Elizabeth Lockhart gave a charming pink rose luncheon on Wednesday. Seated at the table were Mrs. James A. Lockhart, Mrs. Francis D. Pastorius, Miss Violet Gardner, Miss Lucy Hayes, Miss Bettie Kissel, Miss Anna Eyre, Miss Margaret Anderson, Miss Helen Curtis, Miss Dickinson, Miss Lockhart.

* *

A largely attended farewell reception in compliment to the retiring pastor of the First Presbyterian church, the Rev. Edgar W. Work, and Mrs. Work was held Tuesday evening in the church parlors under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor union.

* *

Mrs. Lyon and Miss Ella Taylor entertained at tea last Saturday afternoon in the home of the latter on North Cascade avenue.

* *

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Allward entertained informally at dinner Wednesday evening at their home on East St. Vrain street, in compliment to Miss Vaux and Mr. Hibbard.

* *

A dinner of 100 covers was given Monday evening at the Acacia hotel in honor of Mr. E. T. Colton, secretary of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian association, by the board of directors of the local Y. M. C. A. Mr. William A. Lloyd, vice president of the association, presided in the absence of the president, Clarence P. Dodge. Others around the head table were general secretary, Mr. Charles E. Hall and members of the board, Professor M. C. Gile, M. A. Skinner, W. W. Williamson, H. A. Smith, E. B. Simmons, Dr. Wilson Moore, F. A. Bissell, Dr. A. R. Soleuberger, Walter Scott, William Lennox, T. P. Barber, Dr. W. W. Flora and E. C. Sharer.

Engagements—Married

The marriage of Miss Sarah Elizabeth Hurst to Mr. Henry Casper Bruderlin will be prettily celebrated on the evening of Wednesday, October 2, at 709 Tenth street, Ivywild. The brother-in-law of the bride, the Rev. F. A. Henry, pastor of the M. E. church, South, Denver, will officiate at 7:30 o'clock, in the presence of about fifty relatives and friends of the young couple. Miss Louise Bruderlin of Denver, sister of the groom, and Mr. Harry McCauley, of this city, will be the attendants.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruderlin expect to leave that night for a month or six weeks' tour of the principal eastern cities and will be at home to their friends after November 15, at 709 Tenth street, Ivywild.

* *

The engagement of Miss Harriet Ann Johnson of this city, to Mr. Albert M. Johnson of Rockford, Ill., has been announced and the marriage will take place late in October. The bride-elect is a sister of Mrs. Verner Z. Reed of Paris, France, and Mrs. Florence E. Titus of this city. The ceremony will be an evening one in the Titus home, 22 West Del Norte street, and the young couple will make their home in Rockford, Ill. It is somewhat anticipated that Mr. and Mrs. Reed will come to Colorado Springs for the wedding although not yet decided.

* *

In the home of Mrs. N. A. Snyder, Portland, Oregon, September 18, at 8 p. m., Miss Ruth Mummah and Mr. Guy A. Spooner both of Colorado Springs, were united in marriage by the Rev. E. S. Muckley, pastor of the First Christian church. The bride wore Persian lawn trimmed with hand embroidery and lace and carried white asters and brides roses.

Miss Glen E. Mummah, sister of the bride was the maid of honor and the ring bearer was Miss Edith Snyder. Both were becomingly gowned in white.

Mr. and Mrs. Spooner will make their home in Portland where he is established in business. A number of former Colorado Springs people were among the wedding guests, E. M. Capell, Francis Capell, Letta Capell, Earl W. Cumings, Elizabeth Cumings, Laurence Snyder, Ruth Snyder, Mrs. John Upton, Snyder, Edith Snyder, Ruth Snyder, Mrs. John Upton, N. A. Snyder, Mrs. E. Snyder, J. W. Campbell.

* *

The wedding of Mrs. Mary E. Gould and Mr. James L. Smith, both of Leadville, was celebrated Wednesday evening in the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Smith, 732 East Kiowa street. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Henry Rutgers Remsen, rector of the Grace Episcopal church.

Near relatives were the only witnesses, and after congratulations Mr. and Mrs. Smith departed on a brief trip to Denver. They will reside in Leadville, where Mr. Smith is the superintendent of construction for the Curtis and Hine company.

Formal—Informal

* *

On September 23, Mrs J. A. Wilson entertained a party of relatives and friends in her beautiful country home, the occasion being a reunion of the Wilson family. The guests arrived about midday and promptly at 1 o'clock they repaired to the dining room where an elaborate dinner was in readiness.

Afterwards a group photo was taken and Miss Lucy Wilson and Miss Bender favored the company with some excellent readings. Mr. Ed. Elliott, of Ohio, assisted in the impromptu program, rendering vocal selections in a pleasing way.

Those participating were Mrs. Bulling, of Missouri; Mrs. J. B. Wuester, Miss Lottie Wuester, Kansas; Mr. Will Long, Mr. Ed. Elliott, Ohio; Miss Hanna J. Walters, Colorado Springs; Mrs. John Bolen, the Misses Bolen, of Edgerton; Mrs. M. J. Bender, Miss Bender, Miss Irene Bender, Gilpin ranch; Mrs. Fletchell, Monument; Mrs. Wilson, Messrs. Marion and Bernice Wilson.

A pleasant surprise party was given last evening for Miss Leanore Arthur at her home, 232 East Uintah street, by about 25 of her schoolmates and friends in celebration of her 16th birthday anniversary.

The house was beautifully adorned with cut flowers and potted plants and the evening was spent in playing games until 10:30 when a table laden with good things claimed attention. Afterwards there was music until a late hour. Miss Arthur was the recipient of many beautiful gifts and the evening was one long to be recalled with pleasure.

THE thirteenth annual convention of the Colorado Federation of Women's clubs begins tomorrow in Pueblo. The meetings will be held in the First Presbyterian church, Court and Tenth streets, and the official headquarters will be at the Grand hotel.

The local board, of which Mrs. Harry Landon Hollister is chairman, has spared no pains in preparing for the convention. Colorado Springs will be fully represented at the meetings, by delegates as well as visitors. Some of our best musicians will participate in the annual concert, Thursday evening, and that alone will be worth a trip to Pueblo.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.

The program, entire, is as follows:

Meeting of board of directors in First Presbyterian church, 2 p. m.

Meeting of executive board in First Presbyterian church, 3 p. m.

NOTES.

The credentials committee will be in session in the First Presbyterian church, Monday, September 30, 1 p. m. to 5 p. m., 7 p. m. to 8 p. m.; Tuesday, October 1, 9 a. m. to 11 a. m., 1 p. m. to 2 p. m., 7 p. m. to 8 p. m.; Wednesday, October 2, 9 a. m. to 10 a. m; Thursday, October 3, 9 a. m. to 10 a. m.

All holders of railroad certificates are requested, immediately upon arrival at the Pueblo convention to place said certificates in the hands of Mrs. T. B. Pyles, secretary of the Federation, who will sign and hold the same until 50 or more have been received, when they will be taken to Mr. William Young, ticket agent at the Pueblo Union depot, who will honor (stamp) the same. The certificates will then be returned to the parties to whom issued.

Return tickets may then be purchased for one-fifth regular fare upon presentation of signed certificate, not later than three days after closing date of meeting. All certificates must be signed by the recording secretary of the Federation.

Since rumors well authenticated have reached the women of Colorado Springs in regard to a revival of "pieced" bedquilts and coverlets of the days of our grandmothers, the hospital guild has decided to hold an exhibit of heirlooms in the way of genuine quilts and coverlets. That there is a remarkable variety of them in the homes of the city was tested a few years ago by the ladies of the First Christian church.

There were to be seen a great array of perfect works of art after the conventional designs: "Old Maid's Puzzle," "Ocean Wave," "Rising Sun," "Box" etc, etc., glorious for coloring and produced by the finest of stitches.

October 11 and 12 has been decided upon as the date for the exhibit and as all the churches are interested in the guild an exhibit can be held far exceeding any previous one. A call will soon be made for the loan of quilts suitable to place in the collection and all who can will gladly respond.

The Appearance

Some of the highest grade coffees are small, scrawny-looking berries, yet the quality, the drinking quality—is in them.

There's only one test of the value of a coffee—and that tests the cupping and the drinking test.

For this reason, appearance is a secondary consideration with us when placing our coffee contracts. We purchase good looking coffees provided there's the right kind of drinking quality behind the looks.

WHERE IS THE WIDOWER?

"Young women," said Mr. Hunter, "generally make excellent teachers. But if you dislike to work, turn to anything else but teaching. We cannot succeed ever in what we hate.

"Bad teachers, when we find them, are persons who dislike their work. They are like the young girl in the country town who said to one of her friends:

"'Yes, I'm going to take up teaching.'

"The friend looked amazed.

"'So would I,' said the other, 'but where is the widower?'"—Modern World.

The first meeting of the social science department of the Woman's club of Colorado Springs was held Wednesday afternoon in the San Luis school building. When the president, Mrs. Katharine L. Mowry and chairman of the department was brought up for consideration it was unanimous vote that it be not accepted. Mrs. Mowry is temporarily in the east for the benefit of her health. Until her return the vice chairman, Mrs. Jennie Kimball Boyd, will fill the office.

Mrs. Boyd ably presented the paper of the day on "Socialism Institutions." She spoke from notes only, and demonstrated the fact that she is well versed on the subject. The debate, too, brought out the views of the club members, showing that they are keeping pace with the status of affairs both here and in other cities.

On account of the state convention in Pueblo, the meeting of the art and literature department scheduled for Wednesday, October 2, will be postponed until later in the year.

* *

The first meeting of the Four o'Clock Progress club will be held on Monday, October 7, with Mrs. Henry S. Hawks, 429 North Weber street. The general plan of work will be discussed and a reception held in honor of the members of the organization.

The organization of the Steele Kindergarten association was effected Monday afternoon at a meeting held in the Steele school and the following officers were chosen: President, Mrs. R. F. Morton; vice president, Mrs. J. W. Atkinson; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. J. B. Merritt. The meeting was well attended by the mothers of children living in the district and others not directly interested in the work of a kindergarten.

Friday afternoon another meeting was held and a constitution and by-laws adopted. Refreshments were served by the ladies interested and the attendance was such that all feel much encouraged at the prosperous outlook for the project.

* *

A meeting of the Colorado Springs Women's Relief corps will be held Tuesday afternoon in G. A. R. hall for the transaction of routine business. The corps will furnish the program for the entertainment to be given during the open meeting of the G. A. R. post on Tuesday evening, October 15.

REALTY SALES—The Sun Realty company reports the following sales for the week ending yesterday: Lot in block 13, North Tejon street, $2,500; lot in block 200, East Yampa street, $1,500; one-quarter section of land in Elbert county, $2,500; residence at No. 210 East Monument street, $4,500.

BUYS INTEREST—A. L. Powelson of 1109 Wood avenue, has secured an interest in the El Paso Ice and Coal company, and will assume the duties of secretary of the company. The other officers and members of the firm will remain as formerly—E. J. Ullrich, president; J. D. G. Crampton, vice president, and C. S. Gambrill, treasurer.

SACRED CONCERT—There will be a sacred concert at the Second Congregational church this evening, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. Through the courtesy of the Knight Campbell Music company, a large Victor phonograph will reproduce a solo by Melba, the Chimes of Westminster, by Sousa's band, Parsifal and a number of other well-known selections of a religious character.

INJURED BY TOPEDO—Willie Place, aged six years, son of Mrs. W. Place, who lives at the corner of Sierra Madre and Mill streets, was injured recently by a torpedo which he picked up on the Rio Grande railway tracks and which exploded when he struck it with a rock. The boy escaped with nothing worse than badly burned hands and is able to be around again.

SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENT—Dr. B. B. Creighton of Manitou has been successful in growing six different varieties of trees without irrigation on a tract of land in the eastern part of Elbert county near Kiowa. He has 6,500 black locusts, 4,000 catalpas, 200 sugar maples and 100 each of elm, ash and maple. The trees are in fine condition and have been grown entirely from rainfall on what has always been considered semiarid land.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY—The Colorado Springs Monthly Meeting of Friends church is the title of an incorporation recorded with the county clerk yesterday. Being a religious society, it has no capitalization. The trustees are C. N. Draper, Marshall David Morgan and Horace Henkle.

FIRST MEETING—The All Souls branch of the International Sunshine society will hold its first meeting of the fall season at All Souls church today at 5:30 p. m. All those interested in the work of this society are earnestly requested to be present.

New belts for Fall

GIDDINGS BROS

Nifty little novelties

Little requisites to complete the attire. The very newest things in pins, buckles, etc., are here.

A style exhibit of rare beauty

It is with pleasure that we announce the first week's show in the new suit and millinery section. After weeks of active preparations, impeded day to day by difficulties and delays, unforeseen and unavoidable, the new departments are in shape for convenient shopping.

However, owing to the late arrival of the last carload of fixtures the departments will be incomplete for several days. This will not, in any way, interfere with the showing of our enviable Autumn assemblage of women's apparel and millinery, to which we warmly invite your inspection.

The smart ideas direct from the world's most capable designers and makers are conspicuously represented. There is a wide divergence of fascinating models—those pronounced types that fashion has decreed proper. These illustrations picture two of the popular style ideas, but do not give due credit to the beauty of the garments.

The prices at $16.50, $18, $20, $25, $30, $32.50, $40, $50, $60, and up to $100 are very reasonable.

Lovely millinery creations

A showing of fashionable conceptions, revealing the rare beauty of the ideas of expert milliners. There are exact copies of the clever Parisian models, and correct shapes that were originated and shown for the first time in America. You will delight in inspecting this comprehensive exhibit.

ANY PRICE YOU CARE TO PAY—$3.50 TO $50.

The formal opening of our spacious new show rooms, including the opening of our entire store, will take place within the next ten days and will be a delightful occasion. Watch for the announcement.

Silk special Monday

Just as a special, for tomorrow only. If you have never tried our Giddings Bros' special black taffeta, this is your opportunity. The 23-inch width our standard silk, and sells regularly for 95c; on sale for the one day only, yard 79c

Beautiful lace robes

Exquisite lace robes so much in vogue nowadays. We're showing many styles, the very latest ideas, ready to be fitted and put together. They are very easily made up and can be fitted to any figure. You should see these beautiful effects. White robes $22.50 to $55; blacks $27.50 to $100.

Carpets, rugs and draperies for fall are ready

Shopping will be easy in the new drapery room

Draperies and floor coverings to make the home comfortable for the fall and winter. The Giddings store has made extensive preparations. Stocks have been moved to the rear of the second floor, in rooms conveniently equipped to handle the large volume of business in a splendid manner. The assortments of new draperies and floor coverings are wide in the extreme, and the prices are their greatest attraction.

No better time than now to prepare for the Fall and Winter. Make your home cozy; luxurious if you wish. If Giddings' fix it up, it will be right, and the little expense will surprise you.

Draperies

Pretty figured cretonnes, denims and art tickings rich in their color harmony, broad in variety, 15c to 50c. French cretonnes in beautiful patterns, rich tapestries, velours, etc.; plain colors and figures. Swisses and madras for the windows; silks in plain or fancies.

Floor coverings

We show only such carpets and rugs as those we can heartily commend. Floor coverings you buy here are the first quality kind, perfect in every way. Prices were never more reasonable. Printed or inlaid Linoleums, any price you care to pay.

FURS Repaired

I make a specialty of cleaning and repairing furs. Bring me your old fur garments and I will make them appear as good as new at a very small cost. I also remodel furs to conform with the latest ideas of fashion. Fur garments made to order from skins in stock. All work thoroughly guaranteed to be firstclass in every particular. MAN'S ESTATE

A Tale of Red Saunders' Boyhood

Copyright

BY HENRY WALLACE PHILLIPS

"DID I ever tell you about how I first stepped into full growth?" asked Red Saunders. "No? Well, I'm in your luck for the past, and put your faith in me for the future. We've got lots of time, nothing better to do, and I feel just like relatin' history. When a man tells about the days of his youth or that dog he once had, said man ain't ahuin' at getin' rid of it quick. Nay, fair friend, he wants to roll it under his tongue, to let her ripple forth in sections between smokes, because, for one thing, he's got to manufacture it. But, of course, what I tell is strictly true—you have my word for it. Like Bud Simpson and the bank cashier.

"I want $1,000," says Bud. "The cashier, he laughs the 'ha-ha' of the man that knows, and says 'on what?'

"'Oh, my word,' says Bud.

"'What's your word?' scoffs that sneerin' cashier.

"'My word is that this gun goes off if I don't get it,' says Bud.

"'A soft answer turneth away wrath,' says the cashier, 'taka da mon,' so what I say is true, because I'm larger than you are. Bud paid back the money and maybe there's a streak of facts in my little game of talk.

"Well, it started with two ladies—everything starts with one or more ladies. In the little, white painted New England town that's going to proudly claim the honor of being my birthplace some day there lived Miss Mehitabel Demilt and Miss Mary Ann McCracken, besides some other folks. Miss Mehitabel was the quietest, kindest little old maid mouse of a woman you ever did see, but Miss Mary Ann was a roarer, a full-rigged pirate ship with a dark cloud of trouble in the offing. She had a bass voice and a hand like a hired man.

"Miss Mehitabel taught Sunday school, and put lots of faith in man, in spite of the neglect that was obvious in her title. Miss McCracken, she drove a milk wagon because she had no faith in man whatsoever, and she was a scoffer from Scoffersburg.

"Miss Mehitabel was 'Hitty' to the village, but I never heard of anybody calling Miss McCracken anything but Mary Ann—if you'd seen her glarin' out of their iron specks of hers, her gray hair standin' straight up and her mouth drawed across her face like a felipe wire, you'd realize Mary Ann wasn't playful in her habits. More'n that, she was the only human being I ever met who did just exactly what she sweetly pleased, without regard to age, sex, place or reason.

"Once a misguided man broke into her house because, it was rumored around that the old lady was a miser with a stocking full of wealth. And she got him. When the mournful hired man arrived there was two hundred pounds of Mary Ann sitting on the thief's back with one gentle hand lovingly coiled in his hair. 'You Pete!' says Mary Ann, 'git me a bed slat.'

"'That feller'll kill you if I don't help,' says the mournful man.

"'Want me to let go of him and take holt of you?' says she. 'Git a bed slat.' So the mournful man cantered out and brought a bed slat.

"'Now,' says Mary Ann, 'you will come a-hustin' into people's houses, will you? Well, (whack) I'll teach you (whack) that, that' (whack) (whack) (whack) ain't manners. They came a-sound like a pack of firecrackers.

"'Now,' says the old lady, 'you travel.' And that thief wasn't a man that had to be asked twice.

"'You sh'd 'a' had him arrested,' says the mournful man, but Mary Ann raised the slat, and the discussion was closed.

"Miss Hitty dressed to represent about sixteen. She had ribbons and streamers floatin' free, but a kinder nor better woman never lived. Them young clothes stood for all she dreamt of. Give the dreams the go-by and the race was over for Miss Hitty. Feathers flyin' and ribbons streaming. She made herself believe she was still in the running—without 'em. She knew only too well what it was to be a homely, long-nosed, forsaken old maid. I don't blame her a particle. Her finery stood to her like whisky to a busted man. A trifle gay for the folks in father's church was Miss Hitty, yet they didn't dast to say a word. She belonged to one of our best families and her brother-in-law, who could be the ungodliest man under provocation you ever guessed at, held a mortgage on the church. He thought a heap of Miss Hitty, and he'd have dumped the whole church outfit into the snows of winter without earin' once about it if they hadn't used her right. So they overlooked things and gave her the Bible class to run. Mighty nice to us boys she was—she certainly was. I scarcely remember anyone with pleasanter feelings. No nonsense at all to the boys—a curious mix of a harmless little critter, part child and part good horse-sense woman. The woman carried her place all right, but the child couldn't stand the pain of it. Miss Hitty took us boys along a gentle path, full of faith and kindliness.

"Now, Miss Mary Ann McCracken used to roar aloud at the very mention of father's church. One person she really loved, and that was my mother. As for my father, well, he was a huge, stark, big-boney man, honest and sensible in most ways, but his firm belief was that to be pleased with anything was the first step on the downward path. Lord! One look into his eyes would take all the spring out of a grasshopper. He whaled me for the sins of the entire world, I reckon, and he must have weighed on mother's heart—like the truth of some awful dream. She bein' fond of flowers, dogs, cats, horses, music, people, sunlight, human kindness and laughter. Laughter! Well, I'll never forget one Sunday when the sermon was about a Mrs. Jinch. She took in one of the enemy, fed him fine, and, while he was asleep, gimleted a hammer and a railroad spike and nailed him to the floor by his head. Whilst I was revolving in my mind how, and on what person, I could best apply these length and weight about all that one man could teach, another thought occurred to me.

"'Mother!' I whispers, pulling her sleeve.

"'Ssah!' says she, 'what is it, Willie?'

"'You never could have done that,' I says.

"'No,' says I, 'still full of my discovery. 'You'd have pounded your thumb.'

"Her face went ten different ways, and then she snorted right out. It was a scandal. It took her so by surprise she couldn't get the best of it, so we two had to leave the church. When we got outside she sat down and laughed for five minutes.

"I think my father was melancholy mad. Lord! Lord! What a mate for my mother! That tall, proud, beautiful woman, who stepped as if she owned the world and loved it! God, boy, all the tragedies ain't played with a gun. Well, let's cut the old sore spots. Anyhow Hobbs and holler every time she how, Miss Mary Ann used to wave all thought of father.

"One day she stopped her milk wagon and came into the yard, one finger pointed at father like a musket, her jaws set and her old eyebrows drawn over her old eyes till nothin' but a black fire showed.

"'Adele De La Tour!' says she, 'what made you marry that man—what made you marry him, heh, heh? Don't your answer me! I knew your mother before you. You listen. What made you marry him? He ain't got blood in his veins at all; he turns decent vittals into vinegar. Hah. His mother's milk curdled in his stummick.'

"She jumped up her back and shook both fists. 'He orter married me!' she says. 'I'd 'a' axed him! He'd orter married me!' She b'lied over entirely and galloped for the gate. 'I'd wring his cussed neck if I stayed a minute longer,' she hollers. When she got in the wagon she snorted and mumbled and grouled. 'Orter married me!' she whoops, shakin' her whip. 'I'd give him all the hell he needed! Pah! Pish! Yah!—Git out o' this, Jacky hoss, before you take to sing'n' hymns!' Now, that was Miss McCracken, given to speakin' her mind fully and frankly, you see.

"Howsomever, I was walkin' home with Miss Hitty one Sunday, her carryin' her gay parasol and truck, as was my custom, for mother always told me to be nice to Miss Hitty. I was cheering her up the best I could, when, lo and behold, who should we see bearin' down the street, all sails set and every gun loaded, but Miss Mary Ann McCracken! The first blast she gave was:

"'Ha, Mehitabel! Gallivantin' around with the boys, now that the men's give out, hey?'

"Poor little Miss Hitty was flummoxed fool-hardy. She stuttered out some kind of answer, instead of breakin' for home.

"'Oh, my!' she cries. 'Mary Ann, not paying the least attention to Miss Hitty's remarks. 'My!' says she, 'you'd ought to shuck them clothes. What you wastin' your time on boys for? You was always boobly. Hitty, yes, but you're clean—I'll say that for you—you're clean. You stand some chance yet. You git married and shuck them clothes—but s'luck them clothes anyhow.'

"'You could have heard her to Willet's mountain. And away she flew.

"Miss Hitty cried all the way home. I did my best to comfort her, but Mary Ann jabbed her. She was chilled entirely when we reached her front door, and she turned to me just like a child.

"'Must I wear different clothes, Willie?' she says.

"'Not a darn bit,' says I. 'Not for all the jealous, pop-eyed old Jezebels in ten townships.'

"She stood a moment relieved, but still doubtful. 'I don't know but what I should,' she said. 'Then I get in the argument that went every time, on every question, in those parts. 'Why, Miss Hitty!' I says, 'how you talk! Think of the cost of it?'

"That poor woman was so grateful she threw both arms and her parasol around my neck and kissed me then and there. 'I won't!' she says, stamping her foot. 'I won't! I won't!' and she swept into the house real spirited, like a high-strung mouse.

"So I come I was [illegible] plon.

"Some little son-of-a-gun [illegible] see Miss Hitty kiss [illegible] I heard from it. [illegible] town took a fly-out [illegible] Eli, the tin peddler, [illegible] to one side and [illegible] believed in helping you [illegible] I was getting my ours[illegible] —why he'd make a big [illegible] warn. I stood most of [illegible] pretty well, although I couldn't stop at any place without [illegible] collection of rural jokes. [illegible] man stepped over the [illegible] rates a red-head from w[illegible]

"There was always a [illegible] hungry loafers around the [illegible]. A city loafer ain't like a country loafer. The city loafer is a blackguard that ain't got a point in his favor except that he's different from the country loafer.

"One day I had to go to the [illegible] and I see Mick Murphy sitting tilted back in his chair, his hat over his eyes, thumbs in suspenders, big neck showing, his shirt open, his big legs bursting through the pants legs, his big feet busting through the ends of his cracked up shoes, and a week's growth of pig bristles busting out of his red face. Mick was the bold bully of the rougher crowd—fellers from 20 to 27. He worked till he got money enough to buy whisky, then he got drunk and licked somebody.

"The course of such life is pretty regular. Mick was at that time about a year from raking his roosts. Next to her roosts comes holding up the joint. Then the gang gets drunk, [illegible] fight, [illegible] and [illegible] sent to the pen. It's too bad. This Mick wasn't a bad sort at all. His lunch spoiled him. You wouldn't believe hardly what kiddish minds these ignorant, toiling brutes have sometimes; now, sometimes, they [illegible] the front [illegible] size. If I was a painter I shouldn't waste a minute putting down Mick Murphy as a thing of beauty. Little bits of eyes, near hid with whisky bloat, big puffy lips, stained with tobacco juice till they looked like the blood was coming through; dirty handed, dirty clothed and dirty minded—yah! Let me out.

"And stilly—Well, when I remember how that bulldozing lumpkin went up a hoosing flight of stairs [illegible] a hurling door off its hinges with them big dirty hands and brought a little girl down through a wallow of dames, stealing the coat off his back to wrap around her, while he was scrubbed from head to heel, and how the pride of the mob come out when the mother stumbled toward him, calling on God to reward him, and he straightened under the rain and said, 'Ah, that's all right, lady!' If your ol' man'll stand a drink an' a new shirt we'll call it square.' The son-of-a-gun never left his bed for six weeks—why, he was broiled all down his side—why, I remember that I can't call up such a disgust for old Mick, and I hardened and I [illegible] him. Yes—I was the party who [illegible] him, without ever meaning to, [illegible] of Mick, with both hands, applied as hard and frequent as possible.

"Nothing could be further from the thoughts of either party than reform while the process was in operation. As I recall I saw Mick Murphy sailing [illegible] in his chair at the tavern. Of course, he had a word to say about me and Miss Hitty. Now, the bare sight of Mick used to make the hair stand up on the back of my neck and growls boil inside of me. I just naturally disliked that man. So I sassed him plenty. He got mad and threatened to slap my face. I passed him some sweet thought or other, and he did slap my face. I caught him on his mind-bumper, and sent him prancing off his feet—fair bad for a 16-year-old, when you consider the other party was an accomplished roughhouser. Yes, sir, he went right down, clean gone from the quickness than the stuff behind the blow, as I hadn't anywhere near put into my strength yet. The tavern crowd saw a rare and they jumped to interfere for Mick he roared too, and made to pull me apart. The [illegible] wouldn't stand for it. They weren't such high-toned gents, but a contest between a beery kid and a powerful man looked too far-off the boys.

"'You ran,' says one fellow to me. 'We'll hold him,' but hanged if I was going to run. My thoughts was a mix, as usual in such cases—most of it hardly thinking at all, and the rest a kind of white hot yearning to damage something, and a desire to hustle away from there before I got hurt. Then, too, it had reached the limit about Miss Hitty—I sure wasn't going to stand hearing her name mishandled by unwashed loafers. Yet, the principal cause for my staying was my anxiety to leave. That great, big bellowing Irishman dragging a half-dozen men around to get at me, the blood streaming down his face, and his expression far from agreeable, put a crimp in my soul, and don't you forget it. But I seemed to understand that this was my first man's size proposition, and that if I didn't take my licking like a man I never could properly respect myself afterward. So while my legs were pleading, 'come Willie, let's trot and see mother—it will be pleasanter,' I racked my system for sand and steel pat. I knew a trick or two about assaulting your fellow man as well as Mick, when you come to that. Fighting is really as good an education for fighting as practicing boxing is, and perhaps a little better. It ain't so much a question of how you make your props and parries as how much damage you inflict upon the party of the second part.

"Let him come—I says—what you

"There was two hundred pounds of Mary Ann sitting on the thief's back with one gentle hand lovingly coiled in his hair."

holding him for—is it law was a rogue? Let go of him!'

"'You say you darn fool,' says my [illegible] 'He was bad [illegible]'

"'Well, to wit, to say, [illegible],' I says. 'If you will see to don't put me down she gouge my eyes out. I'll take care of his cousins.'

"Thinking what great trick with the [illegible] I learned [illegible] that earth [illegible]

"Just [illegible] Eli drove up. 'What in creation's this?' says he. When he found out he tried to make me go home, but all this only [illegible] I didn't want him made me more [illegible] terrified. I got crying mad. 'Go-ding it all to thunder,' says I, hopping up and down. 'You see we fair play and turn the tides. Eli. I want one hour sight of him—just as he lit, anyhow more, and I'll go home.'

"Eli was a tall, round-shouldered man, who looked like a cross between a preacher and a hoss-trader and a bull-frog. He had a consumptive cough and an easy, smoothing way with his hands, always sort of apologizing. Several times had been led astray by these approaches and licked a quarrel with Eli. Two weeks in bed was the average for making that mistake.

"He looked at me with his head sideways, pulling his chin whiskers. 'Billy,' says he, 'I hev experienced great confusions myself. It doesn't be as you say.' He went to his wagon and drew out a muzzle-loading pistol from under the seat. The pistol was loaded with buckshot. And four figures of powder to each barrel, every one around knew. He walked up to Mick and put the touch of a cold, gray Yankee eye on him. 'Young man,' he says, 'I ain't for your clawin' chawin' kickin' style of conductin' a row, so I'll tell you this. You fight that boy fair or I'll mix buckshot with your whisky. Turn your bullock loose!'

"The men let go of him and here he come.

"Fortunately I remember every detail of that scene clear as crystal. I led with my left, and Mick counted with his chin. A thunderstorm hit me in the left ear. Ker-bang, ker-sow. Square-cornered bite bit off. Somebody hit somewhere. Somebody with a pain in the neck. No time to find out who it is. Zip, smash, run more pains, streaks of fire on the horizon, must have run aground. Rear-rear-bump—the bully for you. Bills! Slam him, Mick! Hit him again, sonny! You got him. Now you got him. Ary-hooray! The switch is open, here we go, bumping over the ties. Gee! How it jars; right over the edge of the trestle—sling. C'm off o' him, you big black whelp, aggh! let go! Twist his thumb! Kick the brute! Get up, boy! Rooooo swish. Where in thunder did the big black bird come from? And what's he doing here? Never mind. No time to stop. Lovely Peter! How she rolls! Who is it that's sick at his stomach?—Mick, probably. Lightning struck that time. Again. Mmmmm mourn. Dark. dark.

"Holy smoke! Rainbow water! He's all right! Give him a little air! Somebody crying. I did the best I could by the big brute. Eli, g-gu-gug-gol-darn him! More light. Daybreak, and here I am again, on the ground, set to the side, the bucket they emptied on me alongside, and I'm holding my head in. And what's the hatefull thing opposite with one eye swelled shut, mouth the size of a breakfast roll, and rolls white and black patches over all? Why, it's Mick.

"Did he lick me, Eli? says I.

"Eli laughed kind of nervous. Neither you nor him, not me, will ever know, says he. He's willing to call it a draw.

"I staggered to my feet and walked to my partner in the dance, holding out my hand. 'Much obliged to you, Mick,' says I.

"He leaped back and blinked till I joined as well as I could for crying. He grabbed my hand and shook it. 'Yer all right,' says he. 'Sorry I am I said a word to you. An' yer the—I'm a red-headed bye to fight. I've enough.'

"Within I was a simple lad, wasn't a fool, and whilst thy violet and some other things held over me in modesty, yet I didn't believe in the impossible neither. And for me to hold that 200-pound rough-and-tumble fighter even was impossible. I saw he was ashamed of the whole thing. As soon as his ugly temper had had the edge knocked off it, he took that generous way of closing the deal. No bad man at all, old Mick.

"'You just say that to save my [illegible],' I said.

"'What's that?' says he, rough and hard. 'Off with yer!' He wouldn't right out being decent for a farm. He swung away.

ENGLISH AND AMERICAN RAILWAYS

Danger to Railway Passengers Is About Four Times As Great in America As in England

From the Washington Star.

THE London and Northwestern railway, which is regarded as the most progressive and probably the best railway in England, and in some quarters it is conceded to be the model railway of the world, sends from one of three representatives to America every year for the purpose of studying railway conditions in the United States. These representatives are selected from the various operating branches of the system, and they are instructed to make a thorough investigation of every detail connected with the management of railways.

The London and Northwestern has the reports of more than a hundred representatives who have been sent to the United States. In none of the reports has there been any criticism of the management of American railways only a mere statement of the facts as they have appeared to the English visitors. It may seem somewhat strange to Americans that with all this great volume of information at hand the management of the London and Northwestern has not deemed it the part of wisdom to apply any of the American methods in its property.

English Roadbeds.

From the point of view taken by the English manager American methods are not sufficiently thorough to meet the demands upon the part of the traveling public in England. The English manager points with pride to the superior condition of his roadbed, which in this country is better known as the permanent way. The English roadbed is superior in point of strength and permanency to that of the American lines. The solid breakers on either side of the rails are called chairs. The most progressive systems are the north and south trunk lines, running from London to northern England and Scotland, where competition is most spirited. The Lancashire and Yorkshire railway is an east and west system, running principally from Liverpool to points on the east coast of the country.

On nearly every railway in England, particularly the London and Northwestern, the ties are of well-seasoned Baltic timber, into which creosote oil is forced by hydraulic pressure through the pores of the wood to the extent of three and three-quarter gallons to each tie. The tie is nine feet in length, 10 inches wide and five inches thick, and, when creosoted, weighs about 175 pounds. To each tie two steel chairs, each weighing 45 pounds, are secured by two iron spikes and two galvanized iron screws, a layer of hair felt being interposed between the tie and the chair. The spikes are six inches in length and weigh about [illegible] half pounds. The screws have a hexagonal head, are also slightly tapered, and are a few ounces heavier than the spikes, and are 6¾ inches in length.

A creosoted oak ferule, or socket, is inserted in each hole in the chair, through which the screws are driven so as to obtain a mechanical fit by simple means. The steel rails, which are laid in the chairs, are thirty feet in length, and weigh 800 pounds, or 90 pounds per lineal yard. For the past two or three years, however, steel rails weighing 115 pounds per lineal yard have been substituted, taking the place of the 90-pound per yard rail. In some places on the London and Northwestern, where new rails have been laid, they are 60 feet in length.

Creosoted Ties.

Each 30-foot rail rests on ten ties, and is secured in its place by creosoted oak keys, or wedges. The wedges are six inches long, three and a half inches wide and two and an eighth inches thick, driven between the rails and the chairs, outside of the rails. The secure manner in which the rails are fitted into the chairs give to the rails a permanency and solidity, which prevents them from spreading, whereas, with the American roads, the spikes are driven against the fuller edge of the rail, with the head of the spikes forming really the only means of keeping the rails in their places. As above indicated, with the English road, there are four spikes and four galvanized screws to every tie, in addition to the increased strength of the chairs, while with the American roads, there are but four spikes to every tie, no bolts and no chairs.

The extraordinary precaution in using both spikes and screws is to add to the assurance that the rail will not get out of position. If the climatic conditions are such that the spikes break, the chances are that the screws will not, and if the screws should be broken, the spikes will remain unbroken. It is for this reason alone that the two kinds of fastenings are used.

This serves as a fair illustration of the great care taken by English railway managers to decrease the possibility of accidents. When one takes into consideration that there have been more people killed and injured on American railways in the past twelve months than there have been in England in more than that many years, it is readily seen what excellent results come from careful building of roads. The number of passengers carried annually on English railways is about the same as that transported on American roads.

The layer of felt between the rail and the chair serves to decrease the noise and the wooden keys, driven between the rails and the chairs, gives to the roadbed a flexibility which it would not have were the chair brought directly against the rail. The keys also prevent the rails from becoming too rigid. The movement of the trains naturally loosens the keys, but this is overcome by the force of trackmen, who go over the road every day with hammers, driving the loosened keys home to their proper places.

The treatment of ties with creosote is expensive, but English managers have long since discovered that it is a splendid way in which to practice economy, as the oil gives to the tie a life of many years. The life of a tie depends largely upon climatic and soil conditions. In some parts of England creosoted ties have been known to be in perfect preservation after being in use for more than 18 years.

Cheaper to Kill Passengers.

During 1907 the general manager of one of the important railways of the United States made his first visit to England for the purpose of familiarizing himself with the method of management of English roads. His reception by the managers of six or more roads was most cordial. In one instance he was given a special car attached to one of the fast trains. It so happened that this particular train was scheduled to run 238 miles without a stop, which, by the way, was the first time the American had ever ridden upon a train that was scheduled to run such a long distance without stopping. After having gone the 238 miles, observing the splendid roadbed, he was asked what he thought of it. "It is all very nice," said the visitor, "the solidity of the permanent way can not be questioned and there is little, if any, danger in the unusual fast movement of the trains, but it is entirely too expensive. To adopt the English system of building roadbeds would entail what American managers would regard as a useless expenditure of money."

The English manager called his attention to the permanency of the roadbed, contributing to lessening the percentage of accidents, and referred to the reports which came to his office about the thousands of passengers that were killed annually on American roads, to say nothing of many more thousands who were seriously injured. The visitor's reply to this may be regarded by Americans as typical, as it was by the English manager, of the influence surrounding the management of American railways. "It is cheaper to kill passengers," said the American, "than it is to build roadbeds according to the English plan."

According to recent statistics compiled in the United States, the danger to railway passengers in America is about four times as great as in England, and the danger to employes about five or six times as great.

Bad roadbeds are largely to blame for the great number of broken rails in America, as well as for a large proportion of derailment. A broken rail on an English railway is very rare, notwithstanding there is a great deal of severe winter weather, particularly in the north of England and Scotland. In the state of New York alone, during the winter of 1906 and 1907, there were 2,809 broken rails. This surpasses the record in the united kingdom for the past fifteen years.

Weight of Locomotives.

It may be argued that the prevalence of broken rails in America is brought about because of the heavy locomotives. Some claim that it is because of the great speed of the trains. The latter reason is not probable, as there are a much greater number of fast trains here for every thousand miles than there are in the United States. The modern up-to-date English locomotive weighs from 110 tons to 145 tons. By the use of the steel chair there is not much danger of derailment, even in case of a broken rail, as the chairs provide such splendid support that it is difficult for the rail to be moved much out of alignment, but with the American roads, unless the rail should be broken near the center of a tie, it will slip out of place almost immediately.

It is a common remark made by Americans in defense of roadbeds in the United States that it is nothing but natural that England should have much superior permanent ways because the country is older and roads have been in existence a much greater time. To make a statement of this kind is a reflection upon the progressive spirit of American captains of industry. The first railway train in England was placed in operation on the Liverpool and Manchester road, September 16, 1830. America was not far behind. The Camden and Amboy road, in New Jersey, now forming a link in the Pennsylvania system between New York and Philadelphia, was opened in 1831.

Fast Trains in England.

The question of broken rails in England of recent years, as it is an unusual occurrence, while in the United States the number of broken rails are increasing annually, it may be that the English railmaker has mastered the science of making rails that do not break easily. There is no steel trust in England like that in America. An English railway manager is responsible for the statement that he would not care to use American-made rails on any part of his system.

Some Americans may regard the English as too slow, but when one takes into consideration the great number of unusually fast trains in use in England it would seem that English travelers are in as much of a hurry as are the Americans. The Englishman may be slow in some things, but he is not dilatory in protecting the lives of the people who travel upon English railways. His fixs rather particularly the Easter [illegible] and [illegible] in advance of the American.

AN AMBASSADOR'S HOSPITALITY

From the New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung, September 5.

The present ambassador in London is a man of wealth, which he has always put to honorable uses. His magnificent residence in Madison avenue has ever been one of the few gathering places of New York's artistic and intellectual society. A man of such type regards it as a necessity to maintain in his official station as well such an establishment as is suited to his means and in accord with the wide scope of what he considers his representative obligations. The fault-finders do not complain that there is an ostentatious display of riches; it is possible that Whitelaw Reid does not [illegible] court even one of his countrymen, nor admit him into the inner circles of the ambassadorial household simply because such countryman happens to be rich. Proofs abound, however, to show that any one who is at all prominent in the American world of science, of art or of industry may be sure of the heartiest welcome at the American embassy. Many American artists owe their introduction into the best English society solely to the good offices of the American ambassador and his social prestige. Instead of reproaching Whitelaw Reid, seems to us to deserve thanks for the noble and patriotic use he is making of his fortune and for the exercise of the finest quality of tact.

"Send the Whole Boy to School"

Two Great Conventions Will Discuss How to Teach the Young Citizen to Use His Hands. Without Better Industrial Education Deterioration of American Skill Is Feared—There Are Always Jobs for the Highly Trained. There Are Many Inefficient Applicants for Every Job.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Within the next two months two big gatherings of business men, educators, labor leaders and general citizens are to be held to discuss what is fast coming to be considered one of the most pressing needs of the United States, a comprehensive system of industrial education.

The first of these is the annual convention of the Citizens' Industrial Association of America, which meets at Battle Creek, Michigan, on October 7 and 8, and the second is the session of the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education in New York city in November. The purpose of the second of these organizations is indicated by its name, and its meetings will be given up entirely to addresses and discussions treating the subject of industrial training from various points of view.

The convention of the Citizens Industrial Association is unquestionably the largest and most representative gathering of the year dealing solely with subjects related to labor. It is made up of employers and employes, members of trade associations and of labor unions, together with a good-sized representation of other citizens who come within none of these categories. It treats all questions which come before it from the viewpoint of the party which usually suffers most and is most completely ignored in disputes between employers and employed, the general public. While other subjects, such as the growth of the open shop and the incorporation of trades unions, will be considered at its convention, the question of industrial education will receive a large share of the deliberations. Addresses will be made by Dr. S. C. Dickey, head of the Winona Technical Institute, M. W. Alexander of the General Electric Co., vice president of the Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, Arthur Dean, supervisor of the department of industrial education of the Y. M. C. A., and by several large employers of skilled labor.

Aside from these two large gatherings dealing specifically with this subject, the topic is actively discussed wherever the managers of large industries or students of industrial conditions come together. Under the leadership of its president, James W. Van Cleave, the National Association of Manufacturers has lately taken up the subject with the slogan, "Send the Whole Boy to School," impressing the need of educating the hands as well as the brain. In many places where the skilled trades are represented by thousands of workmen in large establishments the owners of these industries are co-operating with their employes and with local educators to solve their special problems, either by the establishment of trade schools or by introducing some features of industrial training into the public school system. Such efforts, however, are sporadic and necessarily local in their influence.

One cause for a movement so widespread and manifesting itself independently in so many quarters is easy to discover. It is to be found in an alarming decrease in the efficiency of labor, a falling off that, contrary to precedent, has accompanied a rise of wages. From every part of the country comes the complaint that it is impossible to secure an adequate supply of high-class labor and that, among the skilled operatives employed, the adaptability which was once the pride of the American mechanic, enabling a man to turn readily from the use of one kind of machinery to another, has disappeared so that a scarcity in one line of employment cannot be met by recruiting from other lines.

In the opinion of many business men and investigators this condition constitutes the most serious menace to the commercial supremacy of America. Hitherto the greater output and superior inventive power and adaptability of American artisans have been assumed as matters of course and have balanced the advantages enjoyed by the manufacturers of other nations in competition in the markets of the world. With the disappearance of this advantage it is held that it will become increasingly difficult for American manufacturers to meet the competition of the cheaper and more abundant labor of other countries.

"The situation may be illustrated by a comparison of the relative positions of this country and Germany in the excellence of the mechanic arts today and a generation ago," said a manufacturer whose products are sold in almost every country of the globe. "At the time of the Centennial exhibition in 1876 the German commission sent over to observe the relative merits of the exhibits of various countries reported that in comparison with the American exhibit the display of their own country made a sorry showing. Both in quality and appearance the German mechanical products were behind those of other countries, and while some of the other countries were ahead of the United States in the finish of their machinery the latter was unrivaled in point of practical efficiency, in the opinion of the commission. It was largely as a result of this report and of the recommendations of the investigators he had appointed, that Emperor William I instituted the system of industrial education that has done more than anything else to put the German empire in its present advanced position as a manufacturing nation.

"Two years ago, when another group of German investigators came over here, they were able to report that their country had nothing to learn from us in the methods of training labor and they marveled that with the great amount of attention paid to the higher education in engineering in the United States no system of trade education has been adopted.

"The situation, so far as practical training in the industrial arts is concerned, is expressed in a different and even more striking way by Secretary James A. Emory of the Citizens Industrial association.

"The statistics of education show," says Mr. Emory, "that between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 children entered the schools of this country in the early weeks of September. Of this great army less than 100,000 will enter the colleges and institutions of higher education. Less than 250,000 will continue into the high schools. The great majority, numbering probably 5,000,000, will leave school from choice or necessity between the ages of 10 and 16, most of them at 12 to 14. Of these a small proportion will receive some sort of preparation for clerkships and office positions from schools of stenography and business. The others will have had no training in the use of their hands, and will be fitted to rank only as unskilled labor, the supply of which is steadily augmented by the great volume of immigration. A boy out of this army of untrained workers may learn to operate a single machine, but he will be like the young man referred to in a recent report on this subject who has worked for four years in turning out a single part of a machine but had no knowledge as to how it fitted in with the other parts.

"Such a man cannot be called a mechanic. He has none of the familiarity with the use of tools and the purpose of his work that is needed to stimulate his interest in his task and to make it easy for him to turn from one thing to another. The chances are that he cannot make even the simplest repairs on the machine that he operates. Specialization in industry and the use of machinery is bound to continue and to increase, but the man who has learned in his impressionable years to use his hands and to acquire familiarity in the relation of various appliances is certain to become a better workman than one who gets his knowledge haphazard and without following any systematic course. That is part of the purpose of industrial education. It is to make mechanics instead of machines of the workers, as well as to impart thorough knowledge of one particular subject."

While the work of special institutions may serve to meet the needs of the particular localities in which they are situated, or even to satisfy the requirements of some restricted industries, in the matter of skilled labor it is held by those who have studied this question that the only means of solving the problem presented by the 5,000,000 school children who are growing up with no prospects of special industrial training to fit them for one of the skilled trades is by the adoption of a comprehensive system of trade education under the co-operation of the nation and the states. This is a phase of the subject that the Citizens Industrial association purposes to take up with a view to recommending a definite and practical plan of procedure. As this organization is composed of practical men, representing the body politic as a whole, its conclusions are likely to carry considerable weight.

At the last session of congress a measure known as the Davis bill was introduced, providing for national encouragement of industrial education by stipulating that out of the sales of public lands the sum of 10 cents an acre be set aside for educational purposes. One-half of this was to be applied to practical education in agriculture and one-half to trade and manual training schools. It was estimated that the revenue under this measure would amount to $8,000,000 annually, which would allow $4,000,000 for industrial education. It is probable that some such measure as the Davis bill will be urged upon the attention of congress at the next session, and that the subject will be brought before the law-making bodies of the various states.

THE INTERFERENCE OF MR. ROOSEVELT

From an article on "Executive Intimidation of the Judiciary," in the Outlook, by Frederick M. Davenport, professor in political science, Hamilton college.

There is a broad distinction, which the American people can be trusted to make, between a usurping executive and a thoroughly efficient executive. As a matter of fact, the constitution is fortunately so formed that a strong man can be president of the United States and not lose his mental or moral virility.

Most of our executives, as the result of political compromise in selection, have been on the whole, mediocre men. Since the wise and benevolent administration of Washington there have been only four presidents of pre-eminent executive strength. These men are Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln and Roosevelt. And Roosevelt is the only one of the four who has not actually exceeded his constitutional powers.

Jackson defied the distinguished head of our judicial system to his face in the Georgia-Cherokee case. "John Marshall has issued his order," said the narrow-man of iron. "Now let him enforce it." And it was never enforced. And in that defiance Jackson unquestionably fractured the constitution.

Lincoln's establishment of martial law and suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in sections of the country where the ordinary courts still had proper and unobstructed exercise of jurisdiction was held to be ultra vires by decision of the supreme court after the war was over, in the case of ex parte Milligan.

A sound jurisprudence and a wise public policy unite in the defense of Jefferson and Lincoln, in spite of the supreme court and the constitution. But President Roosevelt has been so governmentally discreet and so judiciously advised up to the present time that both the venerable national charter and a sound public opinion seem to uphold him in his several extraordinary executive acts.

Mr. Roosevelt has indeed roundly fulfilled the function of his office, but within the limits of the constitution and with an eye single to the normal evolution of democracy.

* * * * * * *

President Roosevelt's intimidation of the judiciary resolves itself into the use of a strong man's constitutional powers in the interest of the rights of the humblest citizen. The growth of the democratic spirit in government can be traced in law as clearly as in the tread of armies, and a classical example of this democratic spirit, revealing itself through efficient executive initiative, is likely to be the case of W. O. Johnson versus the Southern Pacific Railway company. Undoubtedly Mr. Harriman would interpret this case also in terms of intimidation and interference with a co-ordinate department of government, but not so the American people.

In 1893 the safety appliance act for the use of automatic couplers passed the federal congress. For several reasons the application of that act to the Southern Pacific railway company was delayed until the 1st of August, 1900, when it became operative for that corporation. On the 5th of August, 1900, a humble brakeman, W. O. Johnson, had his hand crushed at the wrist at Promontory, Utah, while coupling a locomotive to a diner by the link and pin system. He was obliged to make the coupling in the old fashion because the engine was equipped with a master car-builder's coupler and the dining car with a Miller hook, and these different types will not couple automatically by impact, as the law directs.

W. O. Johnson brought suit for damages in the state courts of Utah. The Southern Pacific Railway company fought the suit with its accustomed energy, ability and resource, and had the case removed to the circuit court of the United States for Utah. Upon the trial of the case in this court the jury was instructed to return a verdict favorable to the Southern Pacific company, mainly on the technical ground that a locomotive was not a car within the meaning of the act. The circuit court of appeals affirmed the judgment of the court below. And the humble brakeman, W. O. Johnson, and his humble friends were almost convinced that the federal courts of the United States are on the side of the strong rather than the weak, and were ready to give up what seemed a hopeless struggle.

But the cry of that humble American citizen, imprisoned in a dungeon of the law, was heard by the chief executive in Washington in 1904, and at his instigation the department of justice prevailed upon the supreme court of the United States to call up the record of the inferior court, that the case might be reviewed. The brief was filed by Attorney General Knox, a brilliant argument was made by Solicitor General Hoyt, and finally, under the leadership of William H. Moody, the cause of that humble brakeman was won, and the supreme court, by unanimous decision, affirmed that the inferior court had been wrong on all points, that a locomotive was a car within the intent of congress, and that an American citizen, W. O. Johnson, should have damages from the great negligent corporation.

This intervention, rather than interference, of the executive and the department of justice at Washington in purely private litigation, to succor a humble citizen and protect the integrity of the laws of congress, is unprecedented in the history of this government. And this act alone is sufficient to stamp the administration of President Roosevelt as exceedingly beneficent and far reaching in the interest of the weak against the strong.

Following the precedent established in the Johnson case, a similar action has been taken to preserve the integrity of the employers' liability law passed at the last session of congress. The government has intervened in the suit of an employe and taken an appeal to the supreme court of the United States on a writ of error.

Certain railway presidents regard this as intimidation and unwarrantable interference with the courts of justice. But to the average American it is just this sort of executive strength and sense and revelation of the spirit of our democracy which makes a country worth living for and worth dying for.

And so, in spite of the whimsicalities of the president's nature criticisms, in spite of his relaxing flirtation with simplified spelling and his strenuous insistence upon doing the duties of membership in the National Ananias association, the American people love the "big stick" and have little objection to its free use, within the limits of the constitution, in the interest of equality of opportunity for every man.

BIG THING FOR BUTTE

ZINC PLANT NOW BEING CONSTRUCTED.

La France Copper Co. Will Erect Mill. Has Enormous Tonnage of Such Ore in Sight.

BUTTE, Mont., Sept. 28.—La France Copper company expects to have its new zinc plant in operation not later than November 1, and may have it working sooner. The plant is being built under direction of William A. Kidney, general manager of La France company, and will employ the dry concentration and magnetic separation process owned by Sutton, Steele & Steele of Dallas, Texas. While the plant will be in the nature of an experimental mill, with a capacity of about 200 tons of ore a day, the management is confident of success. The process has been in use at Dallas on zinc ores for some time, and Mr. Kidney shipped two tons of La France ore to Dallas, where it was treated before there was any thought of installing a plant at Butte. The two tons were successfully treated. The process separates the zinc, copper and lead from the ore and if La France company is successful with its plant at the Lexington mine it will mean a big thing for the Butte district, where there is a tremendous amount of zinciferous ore. The management of La France claims there is an enormous tonnage of the ore in sight in the Lexington and that on a few days' notice 500 tons of the ore could be mined and hoisted daily.

La France is shipping now an average, according to reports, of 150 tons of ore from the Lexington mine daily to the Washoe smelter. Future plans of operation will depend greatly on the results of the experimental zinc plant. It is understood that La France ore is treated at the Washoe under an arrangement secured by Mr. Heinze at the time of the sale of his other properties in Butte, which arrangement included a rate for all the ore to be produced by his companies in Butte. It is understood that this rate is to include the production of the Davis-Daly company, when that company begins to ship ore.

Referring to the claim of the Bullwhacker, Alliance and other small mining companies, that they have been compelled to suspend mining operations because of the fall in the price of copper to 18 cents a pound, a prominent smelter man says if that price of copper compelled a suspension of any company it cannot have much ore to ship.

During the past few weeks there have been encouraging developments at some of the new properties in the Butte district. The Pittsburg & Montana company has opened a fine ore body on the 800-foot level which will enable it to increase its shipments. The management of the Colusa-Leonard Extension company reports a two-foot vein in its shaft at a depth of 800 feet, which seems to demonstrate that the flat east of the city is traversed by rich copper-bearing veins extending from the big hill. The North Butte Extension company is working in ground under encouraging conditions, going further to prove the continuity of the veins across the flat. The Amalgamated Copper company, still farther east, has caught a vein at a depth of 860 feet and also at the 1,000-foot level, which has been reached by the shaft. The Amalgamated management expects that exploration will disclose the existence of large ore bodies in that property, the Greenleaf.

Arthur V. Cory, a well known mining engineer, who made an examination of the Pilot for eastern interests, says in his reports that there are three veins in the property, and adds: "I believe the chances of the Pilot-Butte company becoming one of the big copper producers of the Butte district are beyond question. Within the last week a six-foot vein of commercial copper ore was cut in the west drift of the 800-foot level of the Elm Orlu. This vein is parallel with vein B of the Pilot, and the ore carried 2.5 per cent copper, 55 ounces in silver, $2.80 in gold and 1.2 per cent lead."

The Colusa-Leonard Extension company is cutting large stations at the 800-foot point, the work at present being done on the north side of the shaft. The big pump will be installed on the south side, where a station 15 feet high will be required to receive it.

LIME POINT LOOKS GOOD

Is Attracting Considerable Attention Among Mining Men.

GOLDFIELD, Nev., Sept. 28.—The Lime Point district, 24 miles south of Goldfield, is attracting considerable attention these days and promises to become one of the important centers of the state, when the proper and necessary amount of development work has been accomplished.

Bert D. White, proprietor of the Denny Dulin group, returned the latter part of the week from a trip to that section. He was accompanied by Charles S. Onderdonk, a prominent Denver mining engineer, who went out to look over the group. The easterner was much impressed with the property which he went to view, so much so, in fact, that he is considering a proposition to invest heavily at that point.

The Dulin property has one of the best showings in the district, being located but three miles east of the Great Western group, which is too well known to need commendation. On one of the claims a perpendicular shaft 122 feet deep has been sunk and at this point the company is drifting both east and west on a very promising ledge, which returns assays of from $33 to $166 a ton. A 15-horsepower hoist, with other equipment for the best, has been installed and development work is proceeding rapidly.

Near this group is Walter Stone's Southern Nevada Copper company on the east, with a shaft down 50 feet. It is the intention here to continue to the 200 without interruption. One-half mile to the south is the property of the Tiger Butte Gold Mining company, which has an incline shaft down 105 feet and has a ledge 12 feet wide with average assays of $25 to the ton.

How Luke Short Became Marshal of Dodge City

From the Washington Star.

"RECENTLY the Texas newspapers announced the death, in Dallas, of the Rev. S. K. Short, an aged peripatetic minister of the Presbyterian faith, who, the obituaries stated, had ridden the circuit of his faith from one end of Texas to the other almost since the period when the Lone Star state was a Mexican possession," remarked a civil engineer of Washington, who assisted in the building of many of the southwestern railroads.

"Only a few of the Texas newspapers made any mention of the fact, however, in publishing this obituary sketch, that the goodly old traveling preacher of the Presbyterian faith was the father of the famous Luke Short, one-time marshal of Dodge City when Dodge was the worst place on the civilized globe. Twenty years and more ago the country used to ring periodically with the deeds of Luke Short. He was often adverted to as a characteristic bad man of the west, but he was very far from that. During his life Luke Short, who died in his bed from a very commonplace malady fifteen years ago, killed exactly twenty-three men, but he didn't murder one of them; he got every last one of them in the square line of duty and necessity.

"A lot of knife fighters and gun fangers who killed for the love of killing and the fame of bloody deeds got after Short when his reputation as a peace marshal and a defender of his own vewed-off person became national, and the time came when Luke, who was one of the quietest and most unobtrusive men I ever knew, had to walk the world looking before and behind him and to keep one eye open even in his sleep.

"A good many jobs were cooked up on him by friends of genuinely bad men whom he had been compelled to send over the big divide, and on several occasions in Texas, his enemies attempted to railroad him to the gallows, and failing that, to send him to state's prison for life. But the late Governor Hogg of Texas, who had met Luke Short early in his Texas career, and who had probed the true value of the man, was Short's firm and substantial friend through all of these troubles, and he was at Short's bedside—Hogg then being Governor of Texas—holding his hand when the life flickered out of the dauntless little ex-marshal of the Dodge peace.

How Luke Came to Dodge.

"It was Governor Hogg himself who told me, many years ago, the story of how Luke Short first arrived in Dodge City, of which unspeakable camp he soon after became the night marshal.

"Short had been in the freighting business at Durango, Colo., and one day he met up with an old-time freighter who had just got in from the long haul-away from Dodge City. Luke got into talk with the old freighter and asked him about Dodge.

"'They're telling me it's right smart bad down that way,' said Luke. 'Is that right? I've been thinking of dropping over that way.'

"'Well, you stay out of Dodge, partner,' replied the old freighter. 'They'll sure git yo' if yo' go thar. They git two or three ev'ry night in Dodge. W'y, on'y las' week they put it on a eastern feller f'r nothin' else but projeckin' into th' camp wearin' a plug hat.

"'Is that right?' said Short, calmly. 'Well, I'm going over to Dodge tomorrow, and,' he added as a sort of afterthought, 'I'm going to get in there wearing a plug hat. I never wore a plug hat before, but I might just as well begin wearing one in Dodge.'

"The old freighter sized up the small, compact, sandy-haired Luke out of the corner of his eye, probably trying to determine whether Short was crazy or just a four-flush trying to get by with some high conversation.

"'Well,' said the old freighter, finally, 'I got a hundred here that says yo' ain't a-goin' t' pull into Dodge wearin' no plug hat,' and he pulled out his roll.

"'You're on,' said Short, and he covered the hundred instantly.

"The old freighter was puzzled to have his bet picked up so quickly, but he let it run as it lay, and both men put up their money with the Durango agent of the Wells-Fargo company. As there weren't any plug hats in Durango and one couldn't be got down from Denver within less than three days, they arranged to start for Dodge four days later.

When the shiny top-piece arrived from Denver the two men took the train for Dodge. The old freighter was still unaware of Short's identity as the quickest man on the trigger then alive, and, in addition to that, one of the most accomplished bowie fighters. Short hadn't been long out of Texas then, and his reputation as a trimmer of would-be bad ones hadn't got out of his own country.

"When the train drew close to Dodge City—the old freighter told the story to Governor Hogg just as the latter told it to me—the older man said to Short:

Freighter Loses Nerve.

"'Bud, yo' had bettuh take my advice heah an' now, an' not git off this train with that thing on yo' head. I'll let yo' pull yo' bet down. Yo' had bettuh git off'n th' train with yo' regular hat on.'

"The bet goes as it was made, of course,' replied Short, and he reached down to the hand-box, pulled out the brand-new silk hat, stroked it with the sleeve of his blue flannel shirt, and put it on his sandy head. He had two guns strapped to his waist and all the rest of the make-up of the frontiersman of his day, but yet, with it all, he looked the quiet, unassuming little chap he really was.

"When the train pulled in at Dodge there was the usual crowd of men at the station, and the usual number of them drunk and boisterous and ugly.

"'When he saw the crowd, 'I reckon I'll stay on board and watch this heah game,' observed the old freighter.

"'All right,' said Short, and then he stepped out to the car platform, a queer picture, with the shiny new silk hat set jauntily on one side of his head and his make-up as a frontiersman.

"'Howdy, there, Luke,' said Jim Purse, the day marshal, who was in the station crowd. Purdy was the only man in the crowd who knew Luke, having met up with him in San Antone.

"The eyes of nearly every man in the crowd of a hundred and odd were on little Luke Short, as he complaisantly stepped from the train, and not a man said a word or made an overt move. There was something in Short's serious countenance, in his up-standing carriage, and probably in the incongruity of the shiny plug hat in combination with the rest of his make-up, that held them off.

"It would, of course, have been quite in keeping with the customs and practices of Dodge City for the bunch of men at the station to shoot that silk hat into ribbons and flinders as Short deliberately walked across from the station and down the main street without once even turning around, but the thing didn't happen, that's all. There wasn't a word said, much less a gun pulled.

"Short walked into the Gilded Grub' saloon, still with that shiny hat set rakishly on one ear, strolled up to the bar and called for a drink for himself. There were a lot of bad men in the saloon, too. But they just looked. They didn't say anything about the hat and they didn't shoot.

"Short disposed of his drink, and then he removed his hat and held it in his hands for a minute. Then he placed it on the floor of the saloon in front of the bar, brim down, and sedately jumped on it till it was the merest pulp.

"'Meanwhile, the old freighter with whom he had made the bet had followed him up, noticing that there was no shooting, and he took Short by the hand.

"'Buddy-podner,' he said, 'yo' win, an' yo' kin telegraft the man at Durango t' ship th' dust along t' ye. W'ile I respecks yo' f'r bein' a man o' nerve, I kaint respeck yo' f'r bein' a d— d fool, which th' same, barrin' yo' feelin's an' askin' yo' pardon, I thinks yo' is.'

Made Him Marshal.

"Three days later Luke Short was made night marshal of Dodge, and the way he eventually succeeded in taming that bad camp so that most of the bad men would all but eat out of his hand is a matter of general history and recollection with those who remember the bad camps of this country.

"Now I get to how I myself made Luke Short's acquaintance. This happened when Luke was night marshal of Dodge.

"I was attached to the surveying corps of a branch railroad that was being pushed by a point above Dodge. One night I took it into my head to mingle in the hot life of Dodge for a few hours—you are to remember that I was a middling young fellow at that time. I just hankered to take a look at Dodge's bunch of hard propositions with the guns strapped to their suspenders, and that's what I did.

"But when I got into Dodge they didn't seem to me to be bad at all, and they took me in hand and treated me royally, as I thought in my foolish, unseasoned way—if making me drink a whole lot more bad whisky than I had ever drank before or than was good for me was treating me royally.

"Along toward midnight I got into a poker game with four heavy-artillered chaps at Toole Kingsley's famous 'Hell and Busted' combination honkatonk and faro bank. One of my tablemates—but I didn't find out this till later—was one of the most infamous bad men of the Indian Territory, Bud Kimball, who was lynched a few years afterward for the murder of a whole family in southern Arkansas.

"I had no business playing cards with that bunch in the first place, but as long as I was in the game I sure enough had no right to win the way I did. But I did win from the beginning. My luck in drawing papers was something startling, and an hour after the beginning of the game all four of the men I was playing with were regarding me with suspicion.

"Considering the almost miraculous luck I had I couldn't really blame them either. It made no difference what I drew to, I got the top hand nearly every time. Pat hands were slipped to me almost as often as pairs were served out to the other fellows.

"After a couple of hours the luck took another switch. While I seemed to get nothing at all on the deals of the other fellows, I dealt myself hands that positively smelt of brimstone, and this fact didn't tend to soften the glares that they all bestowed upon me. Every time I showed up one of these remarkable self-dealt hands and scooped in a pot I felt my back hair rising.

"Finally it was my deal on a jackpot. The man on my left cracked it, and it was boosted all around till it got up to me. I had four eights, and of course, I just naturally had to hist it the limit.

"I was pretty shaky over doing this, but I was conscious of my own entire innocence. I had been drinking a heap of bad whisky, and I was determined to play the string out, anyhow.

"They looked at me pretty hard when I raised it the limit before the draw, and probably there was some knee-rubbing. They all slid their beans to the center, however, standing the raise, and when it got around to Bud Kimball he slammed his bundle of gold—he was shy on chips and refused to buy any more—into the heap, with a great oath.

Bud's Ultimatum.

"'Bud,' he said to me, looking at me hard out of his little eyes, 'some o' your work here t'night has been so cut an'-dried lookin' as t' excite a hull lot o' doubt about your bein' on th' square. If you happen t' have anythin' in that fist o' your'n this time that'll top the good ones, I'm clingin onto right now, then you havin' dished out this mess yourself, there won't be no manner o'question about you bein' a proper crook.'

"There were a few little flowers of speech in that address that I won't elaborate.

"Was I scared? Well the cards just dropped out of my hand face up on the table, I was so scared. I was so paralyzed with fear that I simply couldn't move or say a word, and what's more, I'm not a particle ashamed to win up to it. When the cards fell out of my hand that way Kimball reached over and picked them up.

"'Well, you are a crook, ain't you?' he said when he saw the value of the hand that topped his three aces, and as he spoke he whipped out the big gun on the right side of his belt. I was pretty middling blind with the realization of what this move meant, and of my own defenselessness, and when I heard a loud report I gave it all up and figured it out that I was already about three-quarters of the distance over the big divide.

"When I opened my eyes a second later I saw Kimball staring at the door. His right arm was hanging limp at his side. His gun had fallen on the table without having been discharged, and his left arm was in the air. So were the arms of the other three men, and they also had their eyes glued on the door.

"He was Luke Short, Dodge's night marshal. I had observed him eyeing me earlier in the evening when I first got mixed up at the box with the fellows who had invited me into the poker game. I didn't know who he was then, and I wondered why he was sizing me up so sharply. I knew later of course, that he saw I was a tenderfoot who was likely to get into serious trouble later on in the evening. The shot I had heard when I'd given up the whole thing was from one of Luke Short's guns. It had taught Bud Kimball in the right shoulder just in the nick of time, causing the gun with which the killer meant to kill me to fall from his hand.

"'Slope for your camp, son,' said the little night marshal to me, in his quiet way, and I was out of that room like a cat.

"In later years I got on friendly terms with Short, and he told me that two of the men who had been at that poker table with me in Dodge had laid for him for his interference that night and that he had been compelled to kill them both in self-defense."

Harriman: Villain, or Empire Builder?

Attempt to Throw Him Down to Appease Roosevelt a Dismal Failure. Gives and Asks no Mercy

(William E. Curtis in Chicago Record-Herald.)

I ASKED one of the wise men of Wall Street whether it is true, as reported frequently in the newspapers, that the great financiers and railway managers have picked E. H. Harriman for a Jonah and have decided to throw him overboard as an awful example to propitiate the White House.

"For a time after the sensational disclosures about the Alton transaction and the March panic some of the Wall Street leaders tried to throw him down," replied my friend, "but H. H. Rogers and the Rockefeller crowd stood by him to the limit. Several of his associates got out from under. Some of them tried to break him, and insisted upon his withdrawal from the active control of the properties with which he is connected; but Harriman wouldn't listen a minute. He seems to be stronger than ever, and hasn't lost a mile of road. He is the last person in the world to 'lay down.' Harriman always fights to win. He gives no quarter, and he asks none. Men who get in his way are apt to have trouble, while those who betray him or try to trip him, had better get out of the business before he has time to settle. His associates have quit fighting him on the inside, but he has an army of enemies on the street. The incessant hammering has impaired confidence and the big public throughout the country is distrustful on account of the enmity of the president and the sensational reports concerning the intentions of the interstate commerce commission and the department of justice. But these are only temporary. Public opinion is supreme. It takes some time for it to develop and express itself. It is usually as slow as proceedings in a court but it gets there all the same, and when it makes up its mind whether Harriman is a villain or an empire-builder it will render its decision.

A Great Empire Builder.

"Harriman is a great empire-builder. He has improved all the properties he controls in a remarkable manner. He has spent $250,000,000 on the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific without graft or scandal, and no one accuses him of putting any of the money in his pocket.

"There are some features of the Alton case which are not thoroughly understood by the public. It will seem incredible, but, nevertheless, the Alton scheme was worked while Mr. Harriman was in Alaska, and he personally did not have anything to do with it. Whether it was planned by him before he left and the details carried out by his associates and subordinates I can not say. And it is true that he stands for it. But Wall Street stands for it, too. It was not considered a dishonorable transaction by the financial men of New York. He bought 98 per cent of the Alton stock, not, as has been alleged, with money belonging to his other railroads, but with funds furnished by the bankers of this city. The road had spent its earnings in improvements rather than dividing them among its stockholders in dividends. Harriman issued $60,000,000 of bonds, capitalized those expenditures, repaid the amount to the stockholders and realized the profit. According to the ethics of Wall Street that was all right, but the public look at it from another point of view and it is difficult to convince them of the honesty of men who will carry out such a scheme.

"Harriman's refusal to answer the questions asked him by the interstate commerce commission does not hurt him here. On the contrary, it increases his prestige. He was acting under the advice of his counsel, because the precedent involved means a great deal to every railroad president and corporation manager in the country. They approve Harriman's refusal to answer, because the commission may be asking them similar questions at any time, which they might not like to answer. The United States supreme court, in the Kilbourn case, some years ago, decided that a committee of congress had no right to inquire into the private affairs or demand the books of any citizen who is not connected with the government, and the lawyers here take the position that this same rule applies to the interstate commerce commission. If that is straight Mr. Harriman was legally justified in refusing to answer, because the inquiries related to his private affairs and not to his official transactions. I understand the government has taken the case into court and will carry it up to the supreme bench for a final decision as to how far a government inquiry may be carried into the private transactions of a corporation president or manager.

Daughter His Closest Chum.

"Yes, Mr. Harriman is a very rich man, and he has very strong capital behind him. His associates are the richest and the ablest financiers in New York, but he has no friends. He has no chums; nobody ever seeks his society for entertainment or amusement. Nobody would go out with Harriman for a good time. His home life is ideal. He has a most delightful family, who are devoted to him. His daughter Anne, a girl of 19 or 20, is his most intimate companion. He takes a great interest in children, particularly boys who are compelled to earn their own livelihood as he was. If you want to hear anything good of Harriman, leave Wall Street and go up to Tenth street and Avenue A, where he is the backer of a boys' club which has 9,000 or 10,000 members. He takes as much interest in that club as he does in his railroads and sort of lets himself out there to relieve the strain of the street. People down here admire his ability, recognize his influence, respect his power and fear his vengeance, but they don't love him. But those East Side boys do, and he can do no wrong in their eyes.

"Harriman is undoubtedly the ablest manager and financier we have had in this country from the beginning of time. Neither Jay Gould nor William H. Vanderbilt nor Pierpont Morgan nor John Rockefeller can approach him for executive ability, and he is the most autocratic man we have ever had on the Street. He doesn't care a d—n for anybody. All persons look alike to him, and, when he wants anything done, he picks his man and tells him to do it without ceremony. It may be a clerk in his office or it may be the president of a bank. He treats them all alike. He knows no caste. He is so constructed that he finds his greatest pleasure in dictating the work of other strong men. His manners are atrocious, and the men he deals with don't like them, and would not tolerate them in any other living being, but they put up with them in Harriman's case, because they know it is only his peculiar way, and he is a winner. He is of just as much importance to them as they are to him, and they submit to his dictation and call it his idiosyncrasies. He is the greatest constructive power, the greatest manipulator and the boldest operator the financial world has ever seen, and, like so many great leaders, he is a man of small stature. Like so many world builders, he is the son of a poor clergyman.

"Harriman was born on Long Island in 1848 and was one of six children, four boys and two girls. His father was the Rev. Orlando Harriman, an Episcopal clergyman, who preached all his life in and around New York; on Long Island, Staten Island, at Hoboken, Jersey City and other obscure parishes on starvation salaries. Harriman went to the district schools until he was 14 or 15 years old, when he got a job as a messenger boy in a broker's office. From that moment until now he has been more or less of a stock operator. He learned the technical part of the game in his childhood from the very bottom, and nobody understands it better than he.

"By the time he was 22 years old he had made enough money to buy a seat on the stock exchange and became a professional speculator; a gambler, a stock jobber, some people call it, buying and selling stocks on his own account as well as for commission houses, which distribute orders around among the individual traders so as to conceal their own operations. He went through the stormy times created by Jim Fisk, Jay Gould, Daniel Drew and other big operators in those days and learned a great deal from his actual experience and contact with the sharpest and shrewdest adventurers in the world. He has an extraordinary memory for facts and figures. He never forgets anything. When he was on the market he could tell you off-hand, without looking at the tape, the quotations of any stock on the list. He knew every man on the street and could ascertain almost by instinct what he was up to. This power of penetration and his knowledge made him very valuable to the big operators, and they employed him to his great profit. He organized the firm of Harriman & Co., which is still in existence, before he was 25, and it has always had the patronage of rich and powerful customers, who trusted him to the limit. He married Miss Mary Averell, the daughter of a well-known capitalist and railroad manager of reputation, and his married life has been exceptionally happy and fortunate. You often hear it said that no man is a hero to his valet, but I think Harriman is an exception. His servants, his secretaries and others who are the closest to him in every-day life, like the members of his family, are devoted to him, and that is a pretty high recommendation. On the street they call him 'a cold-blooded little cuss,' and that is a good description of the man. But the members of his family and his secretaries resent the epithet with indignation.

All Very Cautious Now.

"Before the March panic," continued my friend, "seven men thought they controlled the situation. They were Harriman, William Rockefeller, Rogers, Stillman, Schiff, Ryan and Morgan; but they found they could not do it. The world is too big for them. Ryan and Morgan have practically pulled out, and while they are likely to reappear at any time, they are not in it today. Stillman is still in Europe, and has not had anything to do with affairs for some time. That leaves Harriman, Rogers, Rockefeller and Schiff, who are now playing on the defensive against public opinion and the Roosevelt administration, and are proceeding with the greatest caution because they realize that the times are precarious. They have had a narrow escape, and they realize it; but, if the government will now give us a little rest, and prevent the noisy special agents and attorneys of the department of justice and the interstate commerce commission from filling the newspapers with hot air sensations, public confidence will soon be restored and things will go along all right. There is more respect for congress and for congressional legislation than there used to be; there is more respect for the interstate commerce commission and the courts; there is more respect for the authority of the federal government among the corporations than there ever was before, and if agitation can be stopped the laws will be observed and the decisions and orders of the interstate commerce commission will be respected hereafter. Everybody approves the president's speech at Indianapolis.

"The president will make a great mistake if he drags everybody into the courts; if he insists upon indicting every railroad manager and trying every charge that has been made by his special agents. He can vindicate the law and establish the principle by prosecuting and convicting the most conspicuous offenders, like the Pennsylvania or the New York Central or the Union Pacific, or the Great Northern. That will accomplish all that is necessary and stop the discriminations and rebates and combinations that are complained of. But every transportation company in the country, small and great, is equally guilty, every railroad manager and freight agent has done the same thing and everybody knew it; the interstate commerce commission as well as the speculators on the street and the shippers on the produce exchanges. But it will be impossible for the government to prosecute every one of them, and it would destroy the prosperity of the country if such a thing were attempted. The Standard Oil company is probably the greatest offender. Therefore, it should be made an example, but no good can be accomplished, and a great deal of harm can be done, by prosecuting everybody.

The Poisonous Snakes of the United States

From the Washington Star.

IN North America, omitting Mexico, there are about twenty venomous kinds of snakes, including the elapids or coral snakes, the copperhead, the water moccasin, two kinds of elstrurus (the ground rattler and the massasauga), besides a number of species of rattlesnake, such as the "dog-faced," "banded," "diamond," "Texas," "red diamond," "pacific," "tiger," "horned," "green," "white," "red" and Price's rattlesnake.

The harlequin or bead snake (belonging with the coral snakes) is found in Virginia, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina, Mississippi and north along the Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio rivers. It is gentle in disposition, although possessed of poisonous fangs, fastened one on each side of the upper jaw to the anterior end of the maxillary bone. Its favorite haunt is underground in sweet potato fields, where it is frequently unearthed by laborers in harvesting. This snake is very prettily marked, having a ground color of red with numerous black rings and intermediate spaces of yellow. The tail is alternately black and yellow.

The Sonoran coral snake belongs to the lower Sonoran province, but seems restricted to the regions east of the great Colorado river and west of the continental divide. It has been found as far north as Fort Whipple and also at certain points in southern Arizona and Mexico. Its coloration is peculiarly pretty. The front part of the head is black, back of this is a yellow or creamy white ring, and behind this is a broad light brick-red ring, involving 11 scales. Next comes another creamy white ring, followed by a black ring eight scales wide. Then come black and red rings alternately, separated by white rings. In brief, there are 11 black and 11 red rings on the body, separated by twice as many white ones. The tail is ringed with black and white, without any red.

The coral snakes are gentle and even amiable, but when provoked they can inflict a more venomous bite than a rattlesnake or moccasin of the same size. Indeed, there may be said to exist a kind of relationship between the coral snakes and the Indian cobra, since the external and internal structure is very similar in each, although the snakes differ so entirely in general appearance.

Leaving out the coral snakes, all other North American venomous snakes are grouped as pit vipers or crotalids, the word "pit" referring to the deep depression found in all rattlesnakes, copperheads and moccasins on both sides of the face between the nostril and the eye. If this depression is not there, it is certain that the snake is not a crotalid.

The Most Dreaded Snake.

Copperheads, also known in different localities as "upland moccasin," "chunkhead," "deaf adder," "pilot snake," etc., are perhaps more to be dreaded than any other American snake, as they have no rattle with which to sound an alarm. Their movements, too, are very rapid, and they are also much more aggressive than the rattlesnakes. Copperheads seldom exceed three feet in length. Their bodies, which are strong and thick, terminate in a short tail, provided underneath with a row of shields. They are generally found on low ground between the forty-fifth parallel of north latitude and the extreme south of the eastern United States. Like all other crotalids, the copperhead produces its young alive, the average number being from seven to nine.

The water moccasin is very venomous, and is really more to be dreaded than the rattlesnake, as it will attack anything and everything in sight, and without apparent provocation. Its color is greenish-brown, and it may be easily recognized by a number of dark bands somewhat similar to those of the copperhead. Its range extends from North Carolina along the coast to the Mexican boundary, and also a considerable distance up the Mississippi river and some of its tributaries. One authority states that the copperhead "delights in climbing trees—apparently for the pleasure of basking in the sun."

The Rattlesnake Family.

Most conspicuous among the pit vipers, which are common to Asia as well as America, are the dread rattlesnakes, which group of them is, however, confined to America alone. They are distinguished from other snakes by the jointed, horny appendage at the end of the tail, commonly known as the "rattle." In young specimens the tail ends in a single button, which is nothing more than the last joint, but by the time the snake has reached maturity, twenty or more rings may have been interpolated between it and the scaly portion of the tail.

The most prominent kinds of rattlesnake are the "banded" (also known as the "northern" or "timber") and the "diamond," although several other species occur, only these two will receive consideration here.

The banded rattler occurs as far north as the middle of New England and New York state, west as far as the Rockies and south to the gulf states. They are now comparatively scarce, owing to the great advance made during recent years in the cultivation of the land. About sixty years ago, however, De Kay, a noted observer of snakes, wrote: "Two men in three days killed 9,104 rattlesnakes on the east side of Tongue mountain, in the town of Bolton. Some of them were very large, carrying from fifteen to twenty rattles. They were killed for their oil or grease, which is said to be very valuable." In Illinois they are increasing in numbers, for whereas in years past the pigs roamed at will and exterminated the snakes, now they are penned up, as a rule, and so the snakes live and multiply without porcine interference. The food of the banded rattlesnake consists chiefly of rabbits, squirrels, rats, mice and sometimes birds. It is naturally a sluggish reptile, but when irritated its whole attitude changes like lightning. Within a second or two it coils itself, shakes its rattles violently and strikes at whatever happens to be within reach.

The Diamond Rattler.

The diamond rattlesnake is strictly a southern species, its range being confined to the seaboard below the Carolinas. Its favorite haunts are damp, shady places. It differs from other rattlesnakes in coloration, the ground color being a beautiful greenish or occasionally a golden, brown; on this is traced a triple lozenge-shaped chain pattern on each side of the back, the golden yellow lines of which stand out in marked contrast to the dark diamonds of the ground color. A blackish-brown band runs from the muzzle through each eye to the corner of the mouth, and the top of the head is either uniformly colored or else it is ornamented with irregular markings.

Numerous methods of treatment have been suggested for snake poisoning, and in many cases the discoverer doubtless believed his own remedy to be the all-and-only powerful one. Most of them, however, had been given to the world before careful analysis showed what snake venom really consisted of. They must therefore, have been largely guesswork at best, but when such specialists as Weir Mitchell, Calmette, Steineger and others had concluded their experiments and observations, then and then only could remedies be formulated on a scientific basis.

From Dr. S. Weir Mitchell we learn that by mixing any venom with a strong enough solution of potassa or soda its power to kill is destroyed. What a blessing this discovery has been and may be to untold thousands. Again, by the use of a solution of iodine, perchloride of iron or bromohydic acid the virulence of the poison is nullified, but in a somewhat lesser degree. Dr. Mitchell regards permanagnate of potash as the best solution, and he remarks that if this agent be injected as soon as possible through a hollow needle, wherever it touches venom it destroys it. "If at once we can cut off the circulation by a ligature," he writes, "and thus delay absorption, and then use permanganate freely, we certainly lessen the chances of death."

First Effect of Poison.

The first effect of snake venom seems to be to lessen suddenly the pressure under which the blood is kept while in the vessels, and at that stage any alcoholic stimulant would be useful, although it can hardly be doubted that many a man has been killed by too powerful a stimulant, and in support of this contention Dr. Mitchell affirms that men dead drunk with whisky and then bitten have died from the effects of the bite.

Dr. A. Calmette of Paris found by experiment several years ago that hypochlorites of sodium and lime would neutralize snake venom by chemical action. Chloride of gold was found to be of equal value, but ordinary chloride of lime perhaps gave the best results of all. He moreover expressed himself as certain that in the absence of any other remedy this last mentioned substance would prove to be an adequate remedy for rattlesnake bites, and this is probably the worst form of snake poisoning that we Americans are likely to encounter. A discussion of the remedies for snake bites would be incomplete without a reference to Dr. Calmette's anti-toxin treatment. In this the serum is obtained much in the same manner as the anti-diphtheria serum, i. e., by inoculating horses with cobra poison. It can be procured from the Pasteur institute at Lille, France, and is said to have both preventive and therapeutic effects.

Slight Chances of Recovery.

Dr. Steineger of the National museum says: "In very acute cases, in which the venom has been injected directly into the circulation, no matter by what kind of a snake, the chances for recovery are very slight indeed. The only chance in such cases seems to be to stimulate the nervous centers as speedily as possible, the best known means to this end being injection of large doses of strychnine, if necessary, intravenously, until tetanic effects are obtained, and the patient is aroused from the coma which has probably seized him. This result obtained, other systemic or local remedies, as the case may require, can then be applied." Dr. Steineger is of the opinion that, as a rule, amputation or cauterization should be resorted to only in very extreme cases, where the victim is absolutely isolated and far removed from any opportunity to seek proper treatment. "After all," he adds, "the main thing really to be done is to assist nature in her effort to get rid of the poison by keeping the sufferer alive until by natural processes it has passed out of his system."

Dr. Mitchell was once plied with queries as to what he would do if he were bitten by a poisonous snake while far away from help. He replied: "If the wound were at the tip of a finger, I should like to get rid of the part by some such prompt auto-surgical means as a knife, or possibly a hot iron, affords. Failing these, or while seeking help, it would be wise to quarantine the poison by two ligatures drawn tight enough to stop all circulation. The heart weakness is made worse by emotion, and at this time a man may need stimulus to enable him to reach home. As soon as possible, someone should infiltrate the seat of the bite with permanganate or some other of the agents above mentioned. By working and kneading the tissues, the venom and the antidote may be made to come into contact, and the former be so far destroyed. At this time it becomes needful to relax the ligatures to escape gangrene. This relation, of course, lets some venom into the blood-round, but in a few moments it is possible again to tighten the ligatures, and again to infect the local antidote. If the dose of venom be large and the distance from help great, except the knife or cautery, little of any value can be done. But it is well to bear in mind that in this country a bite in the extremities rarely causes death. I have known of nine dogs being bitten by as many snakes, and of these only two died. In India there would have been probably nine dead dogs."

WHAT THEN?

After all, when the battle is fought
And the victory won; what then?
Shall the victor or vanquished be first with him,
Who judgeth the hearts of men?
Shall he who fought in the thick of the fray,
Or led in the hope forlorn
In the flush of the early morn?

And the goal is just touched: what then?
To whom will the crown be adjudged by Him
Who weigheth the souls of men?
Shall they who come first, as the witnesses tell,
Who compass them found as they run,
Be preferred to the one, who stumbled and fell
Ere half of the contest was done?

After all, when the journey is o'er
And the haven is reached; what then?
To whom will the welcome be given by Him,
Who knoweth the thoughts of men?
Shall they who bore the burden and toil,
And heat of the fierce noon-day,
Sit higher than he who stopped to rest
In the shade of the dreary way?

Ah! problems that science can never unfold;
Ah! visions that mock as they fade;
Ah! grains and nuggets of truth's pure gold,
That are lost in the mist and the shade,
Of doubts that confront us wherever we face,
Appalling the souls of men;
After the battle, the journey, the race,
And the lever of life, what then?

TURKISH GIRL WOMAN AT 12.

Up to the age of 12 Turkish girls are as free and untrammeled as European children, but with her 12th birthday the girl becomes a woman. She adopts the "tcharchaff," and joins that silent sisterhood who are condemned to see the world through a veil without having lost any of their natural desire to participate in other gayeties.

"HE'S wants you at once, Miss Mason," said the manager. He was mopping his forehead.

I finished the sentence I was writing, took out my shorthand books, and examined the points of my pencils. Finding one unsatisfactory, I sharpened it carefully.

"He usually is," I answered calmly. He does not flurry me.

"He's worse than usual," the manager persisted. "The American mail came in five minutes ago. Four minutes ago he decided to go across to-morrow afternoon. For goodness' sake, look sharp!"

"I may not look sharp, Mr. Harnden," I rejoined; "but I am."

I had already decided to accompany the chief to America.

"What do you think time is made for?" he snapped, when I entered. He is John Freeman, financier and millionaire. I am his secretary.

"I am ready," I said calmly, and seated myself in my usual place.

"To Isaacs & Co.," he began, and gabbled off letter after letter for twenty minutes. Then I looked up.

"You're misquoting them," I remarked. "What they actually said was ..."

"I know," he interrupted testily. "It's a bluff. Go on." But I shook my head.

"Umph! Well, put it like this ..." And on he went for another quarter of an hour. Then I held up my hand.

"Too quick for you!" he said, triumphantly.

"Not at all," I contradicted. "But I must send this batch out to be transcribed, if you want them done to-day. Other people aren't as quick as we are."

I am not quite as quick as he is; but I always say that I am. It is one of our standing quarrels. There are several others. He threatens twice a week to dismiss me, but he doesn't mean it. I possess four qualities that he values, he informs me when he is in a good humor. The qualities, according to him, are quickness (inferior to his own), intelligence (for a woman), honesty (without qualification) and—impudence! I admit the first three. My impudence consists in correcting him when he is wrong. It is on account of this quality that he pays me as much as the assistant manager.

"Umph!" he growled. "I don't trust those girls of yours. You're to read them over, mind."

"Of course!" I said tartly. He has no business to interfere in my department. "I never trust them—or you!" He is a very clever man but he is careless over details, and I always check his facts and figures. "I don't know what you'll do without me in America."

"Yes," I said promptly.

He looked at me for a few seconds, under his eyebrows.

"Will you marry me?" he asked abruptly.

The entry of a clerk for the letters gave me a few moments to recover from my astonishment, and saved my reputation for promptness of decision. I really was taken aback for once.

"I GIVE YOU A MONTH'S NOTICE."

"No," I said, when the door was closed.

"Umph! Go on. Memorandum as to Flight Syndicate, in cipher, to be opened by the manager only, and only in emergency." And he rattled for another half hour till I objected to a passage in a letter to Sharp & Sons, with whom we had a long-standing dispute.

"That's a mistake," I answered. "You can afford to wait. They can't. Why help them?"

"Right," he agreed. "Strike it out. You're a clever girl. Why won't you come into partnership?"

"Mr. Freeman!" I ejaculated.

"That's my offer. Will you marry me before we start?"

"No."

"As soon as we arrive?"

"No."

"Umph! Send out those things to be done." I rang the bell and sent them to be transcribed, except the one to be written in cipher. Only the chief, the manager and I know that.

"Well?" I asked when the clerk had gone.

"Indeed I've not!" I replied with equal firmness. "Why should I?"

"I'm worth marrying," he stated.

I tossed my head.

"Do you imagine that I would marry you, or any man, for his money?" I demanded.

"I know you wouldn't," he agreed.

"Then ...?" I asked.

"Yes," I agreed.

"I like you."

"Then ...?" he asked in turn.

"Then our liking is mutual." I laughed, and he frowned. He does not like to be laughed at.

"Then why not marry me?"

"Neither 'liking' nor 'business' would induce me 'to throw in a wedding,'" I said, scornfully.

"I didn't know you were—sentimental!" he said. His tone implied that "sentiment" covered every folly under the sun, from marriage to murder.

"I'm not sentimental," I told him, "only—a woman. 'Throw in a wedding,' indeed! It is evident that you are not sentimental!"

"Umph!" he growled, doubtfully. "I don't know. Sometimes I have a troublesome feeling—here!" He laid his hand upon his waistcoat.

"In your watch-pocket?" I inquired.

"I meant my—my heart." He grinned apologetically at the word.

"That," I stated, "is lower down, and more to the right; but I expect it's only indigestion in your particular case."

"It's nothing of the kind," he roared. "It's a—a sentiment; a sentiment, I tell you!" He banged the table with his fist.

"I hope it isn't catching," I observed. "The symptoms are rather alarming."

He got up and stamped about the room before he answered.

"I'll tell you something that will surprise you," he volunteered. "I have a mother, and ..."

"That does not surprise me in the least," I protested.

"I mean the sentiment," he exclaimed. "It's about her."

"Oh!" I said. I thought he meant me.

"She's getting very old, hasn't been well lately; wants me to run over. That's why I'm going."

"Then you don't want me?"

"Yes, I do. I—she's got a sentiment. She's set her mind on seeing my wife before she's old, you know. So she wants me to take you."

"Your wife, you mean," I corrected.

"I assure you it isn't!" I declared.

"But it is! You see"—he sat down and wagged his finger at me—"she was always worrying me to get married. So, just to quiet her, I wrote that I'd got my eye on some one."

"Oh!" I said. "You had, had you?" I thought it was rather mean of him not to have told me.

"No, I hadn't," he disclaimed. "It wasn't likely! I'd enough to keep my eye on, without running after women. I don't see what there is in them to run after. They look all right; but they do nothing but chatter."

"I don't," I stated, indignantly.

"Other women, I meant. You're different. That was why I thought you'd do."

"Do!" I cried. I felt as though I would like to "do" for him.

"WILL YOU MARRY ME BEFORE WE START?"

"I meant—you're not a fool." I raised my hands. "No, really you're not. We'd get on all right. Don't you think—er—you might?"

"I've told you I won't," I said, very firmly.

"Umph!" He frowned. "It's beastly awkward. You see, she wrote by the next mail and wanted a—a specification of the lady. I had to say something. So I answered that she was tall, and had a good figure and big, dark eyes. I prefer that sort, you know."

"No, I don't."

"Well, I do. I'm hanged if she didn't ask for more particulars! Women are so confoundedly curious! That stumped me altogether. So I went into the room where you girls sat—when you used to sit with the rest—to get a model, and there you were!"

"What!" I cried. "Do you mean to tell me that was the reason that you gave me your confidential work? And made me your secretary? And paid me a good salary? To use me as a model? A model!" I was so cross that I stamped my foot. "It seems that my face was my fortune!"

"Not in the least," he said. "Not in the least! I don't care about your face!" I gave him a look that seemed to startle him. "Your face is all right," he explained hastily. "I only meant that I didn't take any notice of it, after the first time. At least, I noticed it, but—look here, you needn't get savage. You know perfectly well just what I mean."

"I presume," I said, stiffly, "you mean that you regarded me originally as a model, but that you advanced me, and made me your secretary, on account of my work, and not on account of my appearance."

"Quite so," he said. "Quite so; in fact, I regarded your appearance as a drawback."

"Oh!" I cried, furiously.

"Oh-h!" I gasped.

"As you are."

"O-h-h!" I was glad to find that he did not mean to be insulting.

"In short, you were so capable that I put up with your looks. Besides, they came in very well for—for the model. You are so beautiful ..."

"Don't be absurd!" I begged.

"So beautifully in accordance with the specification, I was going to say! You're tall. You haven't such a bad figure." The wretch! "Your eyes. I suppose some fellow has told ... about your eyes?"

"Lots of fellows," I said, cheerfully.

"Did you like any of them?" he asked, sharply.

"Several," I stated.

"Umph! I don't mean 'liking' exactly. Did they—did you—I mean—er—sentiment, you know?"

"Really, Mr. Freeman!—of course not! What did you say about me in your letters?"

"What didn't I say!" He groaned. "I described your voice—you've rather a good voice, you know—and your cleverness, and your ... er—manners ..."

"My impudence?" I suggested.

"The letters must have been short ones," I observed, feelingly.

"No," he said. "No; you see, I put in all the good qualities I could think of. I daresay you possess some of them, but ..."

"I should not advise you to take them on trust!" I said, grimly. "Really, Mr. Freeman, you have taken an unpardonable liberty. However, it does not much matter. Your mother is not likely to see me; and, if she did, she would not be likely to recognize me from your fanciful description."

"It was the group, the ladies of the office, with you at the head of them. I got a photographer to take you out separately and had him specially touch you up a bit ..."

"Touch me up!" If I had not sent my shorthand books out I believe I'd have thrown them at him.

"Anyhow, he made you look very nice. So I bought a dozen ..."

"A dozen!"

"I thought she'd like to send some to her friends; and I wanted one or two myself—for purposes of description, you see."

"I don't see!" I said furiously. "You are a beast!"

"Beauty and the Beast!" he agreed. "A good old-fashioned story with a good old-fashioned ending. Don't you think—well, you needn't look so disagreeable. There was no reason why I shouldn't have one of your photos. We were very good friends. You said yourself that you liked me."

"I did!" I said. "But after this! Besides, I only meant as an employer."

"Nonsense!" he retorted. "If you like anybody, you like him; and you can't stop liking him just because you don't like something that he does. We're friends right enough. What's the use of trying to bluff one another. You know very well that we are."

"Ye-es," I admitted. "I suppose we are. I'll see when you come back from America. I shall have had time to cool down ... then."

He groaned.

"Do you mean to say you're not coming?"

"I do."

"Is that final?"

"Absolutely final."

He groaned again.

"I don't know what I shall do without you," he complained. "I was thinking of making that deal with the Amalgamated Metal Syndicate. You've always taken such an interest in it. You worked out that if we got—what was the figure?"

"It all depended," I said, eagerly. "There were nine sets of figures; and—you mustn't do it without me. Really, you mustn't. It's the one thing I know better than you do. I do, really, Mr. Freeman."

"Yes," he agreed, "you do."

It was the first time that he had ever admitted that I knew more than he did about anything in the business.

"Then wait till you come back. I do so want to have a hand in that. Really, I do. You must wait and let me manage it."

"Wait!" he cried. "Do I ever wait for anything?"

"No," I agreed; "but this is really my business. I had made the original suggestion, as well as worked it out."

"Then come over and do it," he said. "You shall have a free hand. I'll let you conduct the negotiations, even."

"Oh!" I cried. "How—how good of you! I—really it is a great compliment, Mr. Freeman."

He sat up straight and looked at me.

"It is an absolutely honest and well-deserved one, Miss Mason," he said. "I consider you perfectly competent to do that business. Will you?"

I considered with my chin on my hand. I wanted to go to America, and I simply itched to have a finger in the deal with the Syndicate.

"Oh, well!" I said at last. "If it's a matter of business, I'll come with pleasure. Will you promise that you will not let me hear a word of anything but business?"

"What's the use of promising?" he said, gloomily. "When my mother sees you ..."

"She'll come to meet you, if she has to be carried—bless her! I've cabled that I'm taking my wife."

"Really!" I cried. "It is preposterous. Do you mean to say you thought I'd jump at your offer and marry you on the spot?"

"You always decide quickly," he muttered.

"I have! But you seem to have assumed that I could only decide in one way. You didn't 'provide for contingencies.'" It is a pet maxim of his.

"Oh, yes, I did! I knew if you wouldn't someone else would!"

I rose with all the dignity I could command.

"Then you can take someone else," I said. "Perhaps you would like to have all the girls in, and make a choice?"

I meant this for sarcasm, but he did not seem to see it.

"You might send in the tall ones," he said, thoughtfully, "if they're dark and have tolerable figures and eyes!"

I moved toward the door.

"You can send for them yourself," I said. "I give you a month's notice. I'm not going to stay here to take orders from Beatrice Webb."

"Umph! Why Miss Webb in particular?"

"She is in accordance with specification," I said, frigidly. "She is tall—taller than I. She has a good figure—not merely tolerable. Her eyes are larger than mine; and darker. She is quite nice and quite nice-looking, and I think she will marry you. You see"—I looked at him artlessly—"she is very stupid!"

"Women ought to be!" he said, cheerfully. "If she comes up to specification in other respects, I think she might do for me. But I'm afraid she wouldn't do for my mother. There are one or two things I mentioned about ... about the lady that my mother would notice directly."

He looked at me as if he expected me to ask questions. I felt it was undignified to do so; but my curiosity was greater than my dignity.

"Yes?" I asked, sulkily.

"In the first place, I said she was very fond of me. My mother would be very particular about that."

"May I ask why you thought that I should satisfy her in that respect?"

"You wouldn't marry me if you didn't."

"No; nor unless you were ... but that doesn't matter. What else did you say?"

"I said that I was awfully fond of—of her."

"Mr. Freeman!"

"My mother would be very particular about that, too," he asserted. "If I pretended that I liked Miss What-you-call-her, the old lady would find me out in half a minute."

"Then," I said, "what would be the use of taking me?"

"I—I—what do you mean?" I asked. My voice sounded funny.

"Do you want me to tell you that I'm in love with you?" he inquired.

Somehow I had to laugh. I don't know why.

"Yes," I said, "I do."

"Then, if it's any satisfaction to you, I am. But you knew it perfectly well all along. You've only been bluffing me."

I turned back with my hand on the doorknob and looked at him.

"I did not," I said. "I thought it was only business, and—and your mother; and as for 'bluffing'—you said ..."

"It was bluffing about Miss ... Miss Go-and-hang-her! ... if that's what you mean."

"No. That's true."

"And the ... the model?"

"That's right."

"And—all the rest?"

"All the rest. Only I ... I got fond of you! and I was foolish enough to think that you—well, it serves me right. I ought to have seen that you didn't. I was a fool, and—that's all."

He turned round and dumped his head on his hand. I opened the door, and shut it with a bang, only—I stopped inside. He gave a miserable sort of growl.

"And you call yourself quick!" I said.

And then I laughed; and then I—was very silly! So was he.

* * * * * * *

My clerks murmured when I said they must come at eight the next morning and push everything by half-past ten. (The wedding was at eleven; but, of course, I had not told them.)

"You're in a dreadful hurry," they complained.

"You should see the hurry that he's in!" I said. "I never saw a man in such a hurry!"

REAL ESTATE OPPORTUNITIES

HERE THEY ARE, PICK ONE OUT

Here is one more—6 rooms, bath, range, hot and cold water, lights, lawn, trees, and lot, in same location as one above, $2,500.00.

7 rooms, modern, full lot, 50x190, east front, lawn, fine shade trees, cement walks and curb, good barn. This property is located in one of the best residence blocks on North Nevada, and is a snap at $4,750.

9 rooms, modern, full two-story house, good lot, facing south, close to school and car line, in the north end; $2,500 is the price of this home.

8 rooms, modern except heat, fine shade trees, barn and full lot, 50x198, close to car line, walking distance to school and churches, on one of the best avenues in the north end. This we can sell at the very low price of $3,500.

8 rooms, modern, coal and gas range, full cemented basement, lot 50x198, cement walks, lawn, fine shade trees, large barn, rented. This property is located on North Tejon, on the car line; $4,500 is the price.

8 rooms, modern, fine large reception hall, lot 50x190, barn, trees, lawn. This property is on North Tejon street. The owner is leaving the city. It must be sold; $3,300 takes it; maybe less. Make an offer.

8 rooms, modern house and barn; large lot, facing south; fine shade trees, walks, lawn. This property is one and one-half blocks of Tejon car line, one and one-half blocks of the college; walking distance to schools, churches and business. This is one of the few snaps left in the city. You should see it before you buy. You will have to be quick, because it will be sold in a day or two, and all we ask is $3,250.

A 6-room modern house; hall and front stairway; fine plumbing, walks, lawn. This is located on one of the best streets in the north end; $3,500 takes it, and we can make terms.

A good 7-room modern house on large lot, 50x190; walks, lawn, barn and shade trees. This property is one block of the college, one block to Tejon car line, in fine residence neighborhood. We can sell this at $3,750. With a little repair it would sell for $4,500. To be able to get a home in this location is worth half the price of the property.

9 large rooms and reception hall, modern, hot water heat, 2 bath rooms, laundry, 4 rooms in the basement; the third floor could be finished into several large rooms; large barn with three box stalls; this property is a corner with 100x190 feet of ground, lawn and shade, all fenced; the house is in fine repair; it is located on one of the finest resident streets in the north end, and it can be sold for $12,500; the ground would be cheap at $6,000.00.

Two large lots, facing east, one block of car line; 8-room modern house, hot water heat, bath, range, closet and lavatory, pantry; two rooms in basement; barn with electric lights; chicken house, lawn, currants and gooseberries, cherry, plum and apple trees, and about 50 shade trees. This property is located on high ground, close in. If you want a home and a bargain, see it at once. Not too far to rent a few rooms. $5,000 has been the price of this property. We are offering this today for the very low price of $3,500. Could not be put there for less than $6,000.00. We want to show you.

THESE ON PAYMENTS TO SUIT.

4 rooms, water, cellar and pantry, large lot, 180 feet deep, $1,100, $50 down, $10 per month.

9 rooms, modern, full basement, large lot, cement walks, lawn, iron fence, on car line, $4,000; make your own terms on any of these four; if you think the price is too high, make an offer.

A fine double corner lot, facing south and east, on North Nevada. The price is right, but we want an offer.

FOR SALE---A FEW SNAPS

Just think of a modern house and large lot in Ivywild for $1,500 on your own terms. Almost new, 4 nice rooms, complete bath room with first-class plumbing, good cellar, lot 50x190; fine view, excellent neighborhood. We can recommend the purchase of this property. If you are looking for a comfortable little home, we will be pleased to show you this at any time.

A neat 2-room cottage, small lot, on Fountain street, near Lowell school, for $500; terms to suit.

Two modern cottages of five rooms each on Colorado avenue, corner lot, 100x150, room for two more cottages. Price for all, $7,500. This is a very attractive proposition and should be seen to be appreciated.

The man looking for an ideal residence location in a select community, with every modern comfort, is the man we are looking for. We think we have a site or a home that will appeal to you, our aim is to locate you near people you would be glad to live amongst, and our prices today are extremely low for gilt-edged property, which is all we have to offer.

We would like to have you get details regarding the following elegant properties—"WE HAVE THE CREAM."

A picturesque well-known Ivywild property on the pleasant Cheyenne Road, finished and furnished to suit the most fastidious. A home in a nest of trees, flowers and vines. One could not be sick in such a place if he tried. Furniture bought to fit the house, which you can buy if you like. It would be a pleasure to see this.

A beautiful modern home, exquisite in arrangement; finished with lovely fixtures, furnace heater, etc. Lots 50x190, with house in rear, which brings in $20 per month. Look this up.

FOR RENT.

An 18-room house, furnished, 3 acres of grounds, on Cheyenne Road, near Stratton Park, on car line; well furnished, with large living rooms, 2 baths, gas and electricity. This property will look good to you if you dislike the wind and dust of the city during the winter months, as you are practically in the mountains. Will rent for $115.00 per month, which includes caretaker's salary.

RENT.

Are you willing to take care of the most exquisitely furnished home in the city? If so, let us show you this 9-room house, furnished, with extra large living room, 2 large open fireplaces, beamed ceilings, etc. Garage in rear; beautiful lawns and view. This is certainly a snap for someone who will appreciate and take care of it properly. Rent, $125.00 per month.

WE WANT BUYERS FOR

A 9-room home in the north end, absolutely modern; stable finished complete with coachman's room, electric light and heat. This house has an extra large sleeping porch, a linen room and laundry. Lot 75x190; beautiful mountain view. This is a snap for some quick buyer looking for a home.

FOR SALE.

On Hancock avenue, a 5-room bungalow, bath, gas and open fireplace; large sleeping porch. Lot 40x165. All for $2,450. Just finished—you will be the first tenant.

FOR RENT.

Would you like a nice, homelike place for 9 or 12 months? We have one which is well furnished and well located on North Tejon st. Rent $75.00 for 9 months; $70.00 for the year.

SALE.

High and dry with excellent view of the Peak. Corner lots, 50x190. This property sells for less than $1,000 and is the best we have for the money. See us.

Another snap lot on South Nevada ave., 116x500; an excellent place for a home.

If you are looking for plenty of room as well as location and every modern convenience, let us show you what we have on North Nevada ave. at an astonishingly low figure, furnished or unfurnished.

We have a buyer for a lot near Monument Park; must have a good view of the mountains. What have you to offer?

We have tenants for several small, furnished or unfurnished, houses. Have you any to rent?

EASTERN COLORADO SUB-IRRIGATED FARM LANDS

I have secured about 40,000 acres of Eastern Colorado lands, have looked them over carefully myself, and I do not think there is another place in the State of Colorado, or any other state, that has the inducements to the buyer that Eastern Colorado has. For the last three years 90 per cent of the crops in this locality have been a success, wherever the farming has been done under the Campbell system, or done as well as the farmers in the east farm their lands. You can find no better soil, and the rainfall is sufficient to insure crops.

We do not ask you to buy alkali water rights. We furnish you the best soil on earth, and God Almighty furnishes the rainfall, and plenty of it. Can sell you lands from 640 acres up to tracts of 20,000. And at the prices that I can sell you these lands for they will double and treble in value in the next three years. These lands will range in price from $3.50 to $7.00 per acre, and a portion of them are located within 25 miles of Denver, with growing crops surrounding them.

I have taken up the land business again for the winter, after returning from mining interests this summer in Wyoming, and will be glad to meet all my friends. You can be assured of fair and square treatment, and propositions that will make you some money, as I will handle nothing else.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

FARM BARGAIN

We offer for sale for the first time one of the most attractive investments in the way of a farm that has ever been offered around Colorado Springs. This farm consists of 860 acres, and is located within 1 miles of the city limits. The improvements are first-class and consist of a 7-room thoroughly modern residence and another dwelling of 6 rooms. Fine large barn that could not be replaced for $3,500, large cow barn, with stancheons for 40 head of cows; engine room with engine, boiler and feed cutter, icehouse, beautiful shade trees, city water, with a number of hydrants, two beautiful lakes, stocked with trout, magnificent spring of water, all fenced and cross-fenced, splendid meadow and field of alfalfa, cutting about 140 tons of hay annually. Altogether about 200 acres in cultivation, but more could be cultivated. This is an ideal location for a sanitarium or for a large dairy or stock farm, or for a gentleman's country home, or a good place for profit, through tilling the soil. $25,000 has been refused for the place, which has grown in value since the offer was made. For the best of reasons this magnificent estate can be bought for $20,000, $6,000 cash, and the balance on long time at 6 per cent interest, or we might consider a clear Colorado Springs home as first payment. This farm in the hands of the right party, owing to its close proximity to the City of Colorado Springs, to its wonderful possibilities, its future, should bring $50 an acre.

FOR SALE—REAL ESTATE

A VALUABLE RANCH FOR HAY, GRAIN OR STOCK

Lying about 500 miles from La Veta, a beautiful little city in one of the most beautiful of Colorado valleys on the side of the mountains range, and where beautiful mountain scenery, clear mountain streams, hunting, fishing and other sports can all be enjoyed. 2,560 acres of patented land, 640 acres school section under lease, owning and controlling the entire water supply of a good-sized mountain stream. All bottom land and very fertile, at least 1200 acres of which can be irrigated and cultivated. About 200 acres in hay and grain, about half of the hay alfalfa and half bluestem. The improvements consist of one good five-room farmhouse, also one good three-room house, large barns, sheds, corrals, etc., one windmill and two other wells for domestic water. About 250 head of high-grade Hereford cattle, about 20 head of hogs, all necessary horses for work on the ranch, flocks of chickens and turkeys, all hay, grain and other crops, are all included in the price of this valuable ranch. Thousands of acres of open grazing land lie on three sides of this ranch, which owns and controls the water supply. Four hours and thirty minutes ride from Colorado Springs brings you to the little city of La Veta; then only a short drive to the ranch.

The price, including everything, only $11.00 per acre.

LEADVILLE CONCERNED

LEADVILLE, Colo., Sept. 28.—The price of copper is being watched by many Leadville operators with considerable interest. The loss of approximately seven cents a pound in the past few weeks makes a difference to several properties where copper is a by-product. In the Ibex there are large deposits of this metal, and the lessee on the Garbutt have been shipping a fine grade of material. The Iron Silver mine also sorts out copper sulphides. When copper ranged from 20 to 22 cents a pound the producer usually figured on receiving $4 a unit. The smelter usually does not pay for copper, however, under 1.5 per cent. The total annual production of this metal in Leadville is between 700,000 and 800,000 pounds.

There is a well-authenticated rumor that Thomas F. Walsh will in the near future sink a shaft on the Roy group of claims in Big Evans gulch. Some time ago Mr. Walsh was in the city and purchased the group, which lies near the Mammoth. It was shortly after the first strike of mineral had been made by Major Bohn, and it appeared to be conclusively demonstrated that there was a large ore shoot in that section. At the time, the summer of 1906, Mr. Walsh said that he had always regarded Leadville as one of the best mining districts in the country, and while he would be in no hurry to begin the new work here, that ultimately he would develop the territory he had purchased. Mr. Benson, who is looking after Mr. Walsh's mining interests, has been recently going over the ground and has decided to sink a deep shaft northwest of the Mammoth.

This new enterprise in this particular section of the district will prove of the greatest importance, because it is at least a mile from a producing property and there are possibilities for the opening of an ore shoot in a section that has not felt the magic development outside the Mammoth since the early days, when some shallow shafts attest the restless activity of amateur prospectors.

Major Bohn is preparing for the electrification of the Auroras in Iowa gulch. He will probably put in position an electric pump for the purpose of draining the interior shaft in the Ready Cash tunnel. More properly speaking, this is an incline, but full of water, and there are indications that the vein is to be found below.

The Yak Mining, Milling and Tunnel company owns and operates a tunnel over two and one-half miles in length, which is probably unique in equipment and the service to which it is put.

The object in building this tunnel was to drain the various mines and mineral bodies tributary to its course. The Yak company is itself engaged in working mines which open into the tunnel workings, and it also makes a business of hauling ores and waste for the other mines tapped by the tunnel. All power operations are carried on by means of electric current except the compressors used in sinking shafts. This electrical energy is supplied in a complete power plant, with substations and transformer houses located in some cases underground.

EXPECT BIG INCREASE

OPERATORS ON SOUTH BURNS NEAR ORE SHOOT.

Pelman Lease Has Developed Into Good Producer—Elkton Regular Shipper—Dante Profit Maker.

Special to The Gazette.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Sept. 28.—The Standard Mining and Leasing company, operating on the South Burns of the Acacia company, on Bull hill, is now drifting on the vein cut at 1,000 feet both north and south from the shaft. So far, the ore shoot has not been encountered. The Standard company is shipping out some ore during the course of the dead work from the 800 and 850-foot levels, where the ore body was of very liberal dimensions. The coarse rock shipped gives returns of about one ounce, while the screenings run about $30 in gold to the ton. Only a few cars a month are now being sent out, but as soon as the shoot is encountered on the 1,000-foot point, it is expected that the tonnage will be increased to old-time proportions, which was some 15 cars per month.

The Pharmacist Leasing company is exploiting the north end of the Burns claim through the Pharmacist shaft at a depth of 900 feet. So far, but little encouragement has been had in this part of the property. Work is being continued, however.

The Pelham lease, on the Wild Horse property, on Bull hill has developed into one of the biggest finds of recent years, and will make the lessees rich, and the royalties will go a long way toward reimbursing John T. Milliken, who purchased the United Gold Mines holdings a year ago. The ore shoot is known to be 120 feet of stoping ground, and at the present time the shoot is 15 feet wide, and the hanging wall has not yet been found. The ore will average from two to five ounces in gold to the ton, and it is reported that there are streaks in the shoot that carry picture values. The screenings run away up. A force of seven men is employed on ore, and from eight to ten cars are being shipped out a month. It will not be long, however, until this tonnage is doubled if a car a day is not maintained. This lease is, it is believed, shipping out the highest-average grade ore that is now being shipped from the camp.

The old and reliable Elkton property on Ravenhill is shipping regularly from 1,000 to 1,200 tons of ore a month, the grade of the ore being about $30 or a little better. The company has plenty of ore to keep the property going at its present rate of tonnage until after the Cripple Creek drainage tunnel is completed, which insures dividends to the stockholders for several years to come. The management of the Elkton is only employing one shift of men, numbering between 90 and 100, with no work on Sunday. This is the only mine in the camp that does not operate on Sunday.

Ore is being mined from shoots varying from five to nine feet on the average, with bulges that extend 20 feet from what is known as the Henley vein, which is west of the shaft, and extends from the fifth to the seventh levels.

The Dante mine, under lease to the British Leasing company, is at the present time producing a tremendous amount of ore, and the management announced that if it was possible to get cars the company would ship 50 tons of ore a day to the United States Refining and Reduction company's plants at Colorado City. The ore runs from $25 to $30 in gold to the ton, and it is declared by some well-known mining men that the Dante mine is one of if not the biggest, now operating on Bull hill, with the possible exception of the Vindicator. The present operating company has a five-year lease at very low royalties, and there is still nearly three years before the lease expires. There is no question but the Dante is a big mine, and the few interested in the British-American Leasing company are making handsome returns on the small amount of money originally invested.

CONSTANTLY INCREASING.

Values From Golden Arrow Growing Better.

TONOPAH, Nev., Sept. 28.—Capitalists interested in the Golden Arrow, now in this city from Rawlins camp, are greatly elated over the latest developments in that property. The mine is now a shipping property and on the captain's return to camp he will start sacking the high grade ore that has been opened up in several places. The grade of the latest discoveries in the mine, judging from the last assays obtained, is high enough to permit the shipment of ore and leaves a big profit for the company.

The main shaft on the Cotter mine is down 10 feet and the ore at the bottom is the best encountered in that part of the mine up to the present time. The captain has been pushing development work very persistently in all directions and he has been rewarded by steadily increasing values at every turn. In all the mine has about 1,000 feet of work done. This is all exploration work, as not a foot of ground has been stoped.

The Cotter company owns a big ranch in the hills about five miles from the mine. There is a flow of water that will permit the company to take 200,000 gallons for a mill if it should be decided to put one in, as will probably be the case in a few months' time.

RICH ORE IN HAYSEED

Rich Ore Broken Into in the Drift From 100-Foot Level—Schwab May Build a Mill.

RHYOLITE, Nev., Sept. 28.—The strike on the Hayseed, reported last week, according to all accounts, is not only holding out but showing up better than ever. A. G. Cushman, Ed Beyls and George Turpin are just back from the property, and after a thorough examination they do not hesitate to say that it is one of the richest discoveries they have ever seen in this part of the country.

The rich ore was broken into in the drift from the 100-foot level. It has now been followed for some distance, and there has been no decrease in values. The high-grade shoot, according to the gentlemen mentioned, is from 18 inches to two feet in width, and its metallic content runs into the pictures.

Several pannings of the material have been made, and it is said that 8 is a conservative estimate of a single pan. While no average assay has been taken of the shoot, it would be an easy matter to pick samples which would easily reach $10,000 to the ton in gold. The entire face of the drift, outside of the rich streak, is in milling ore of a good quality.

The workings on the 200-foot level are also showing up well. A well-mineralized area is being entered by the south drift, and the property, generally speaking, is looking better than ever before in its history.

The party visited the Burro, which is also showing a marked improvement. The northeast drift from the 100-foot level shows a full face of $80 ore, and it will be 40 feet farther yet before the drift gets under the richer part of the shoot as indicated by the croppings of the vein. This drift is in 65 feet. The southwest drift from the same level is in 50 feet and is in low grade milling ore.

It is understood on good authority that the Nevada Mines and Smelter company, a Schwab corporation in which Malcolm Macdonald, Donald Gillies and Louis Parkhurst are also interested, intends building a big smelter plant in the Bullfrog district at some point near the Amargosa river, where a supply of water may be had.

Positive confirmation of the statement cannot be had, but those who are in touch with the principals say that such an enterprise is contemplated, and will be undertaken at an early date.

BANK CLEARINGS.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—The statement of clearing house banks for the week shows that the banks hold $5,846,575 more than the legal reserve requirements. This is a decrease of $2,758,525 as compared with last week. The statement follows:

Loans, $1,160,351,500; increase, $2,772,500. Deposits, $1,055,193,700; decrease, $1,829,900. Circulation, $50,658,500; decrease, $19,900. Legal tender, $40,634,100; increase, $[illegible]. Specie, $198,867,900; decrease, $3,658,600. Reserve, $239,445,000; decrease, $3,218,000. Reserve required, $238,798,425; decrease, $457,975. Surplus, $5,846,575; decrease, $2,758,525. Ex-U. S. deposits, $13,549,925; decrease, $2,486,475.

MARKET IS UNSETTLED

Selling Gives Ample Evidence of Professional Origin—President's Utterances Are Feared.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Stocks continued to decline today and the volume of selling was augmented. The principal notice avowed for the depression felt by the sellers was fear of the consequence of the coming public addresses by President Roosevelt in the west and south. It is supposed that these addresses will largely advocate the extension of measures against corporations.

The selling continued to give evidence of a professional origin for a large part of it, but the fall in prices had the usual consequence of dislodging weak account and of inducing some liquidation by the sentimental effect on holders of securities. The bank statement was weak and was made the occasion for some of the selling. The decrease in cash was only as much as the lowest of the preliminary estimates and the loan increase was moderate, but the falling off of $2,758,525 in the surplus brings that item down to $5,846,575, which offers a narrow margin of resources with the interior movement of currency in full force.

The clearing house banks report an increase of something over a million dollars in government deposits. There was some demand for remittance to London by cable, incident to the end of the month, but demand sterling was lower. The heavy withdrawal of gold from the Bank of England for Egypt was the feature of the foreign money markets, but the discount rate in London was unaffected and the turn of the quarter is looked forward to bring relaxation.

Crop damage reports were in circulation, but the grain and cotton markets moved moderately. The lack of explanation for the selling in the news caused rumors of some possible undisclosed development. The covering of shorts after the publication of the bank statement was evidence of the professional nature of the selling. The closing tone was feverish and unsettled.

Bonds were easy. Total sales, par value $962,000. United States 3's have advanced 1-2 and the 4's have declined 1-2 per cent on call during the week.

WHEAT PRICES LOWER

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—The wheat market, with the exception of a few minutes at the immediate opening, was weak all day. The first quotations were firm because of higher cables, but prices soon slumped on realizing sales. From then until the close the market was weak. Very little support was given and the bearish sentiment seemed to grow stronger as the session advanced. Much emphasis was laid on the fact that the grain arriving at Winnipeg is grading high. Reports from the seaboard were also encouraging to the bears, as they declared that the demand for export was poor. Trading in the pit was largely local and professional in character.

December wheat opened unchanged to 1-4 higher at $1.00 to $1.00 1-4, sold between 99 1-8 and $1.00 3-8 and closed a week at 99 1-4.

The corn market was weak all day because of a slack demand, large offerings of cash corn and a poor shipping call. The close was weak. December corn opened unchanged to 1-8@1-4 lower at 59 3-8@1-2 to 59 5-8, sold between 58 1-2 @5-8 and 59 5-8 and closed at 58 3-4@7-8.

The oats market was exceedingly dull, but prices held firmer than those of wheat or corn. December oats opened 1-8@1-4 higher at 32 3-8, sold between 32 and 32 1-2 and closed at 32 1-8@1-4, the final quotation being the same as that of yesterday.

The provisions market opened firm because of higher prices for live hogs, but the market soon became easy on selling of the October options by packers. At the close January pork was 2 1-2 lower at $15.35. Lard was 2 1-2 higher at $8.85. Ribs were 7 1-2 lower at $7.97 1-2.
